Canada gets second chance

Times News Services

Quebec voters gave Canadian federalism a second chance Tuesday night, but both sides in the bitter referendum made it clear they want some changes made.

With more than 59 per cent of a record turnout of Quebec voters saying no to Levesque's call for a mandate to negotiate sovereignty-association, Ryan said the result shows "we want to continue to decide on our future within Canadian federalism."

Buoyed by the solid victory, Ryan challenged the Parti Quebecois government to call a provincial election before the end of the year.

"I hope that the government will not go beyond the reasonable limit of the four-year mandate it holds now," Ryan told supporters at a victory celebration in a suburban hockey arena.

"We have to be given the chance to say before long what party is the most qualified to negotiate the renewal of Canadian federalism."

"We believe that it is possible to be proud to be a Quebecer at the same time as being proud to be Canadian," the austere Ryan said in a typically long speech.

"But you must be reminded," he warned, switching to English for TV listeners across Canada, "that fellow Quebecers will ask us to be firm in the defence of their genuine interests and the promotion of certain principles which Quebecers are absolutely convinced are vital for the future of our federal system."

Across town, an obviously crestfallen Levesque told thousands of flag-waving supporters — who cheered their leader deliriously as they fought back tears — that the result means "the ball has been thrown into the federalist court."

"It's up to Trudeau to make good on the promises of the last 35 days," Levesque said, overcome by emotion and fatigue from the gruelling five-week campaign that ended with Tuesday's record 88-per-cent turnout.

After a standing ovation of several minutes, Levesque told his supporters in a voice hoarse with fatigue that "We'll do it next time."

"I'm convinced that one day Quebec will have a rendezvous with history and we will all be present to witness it. But I can't tell you when or how."

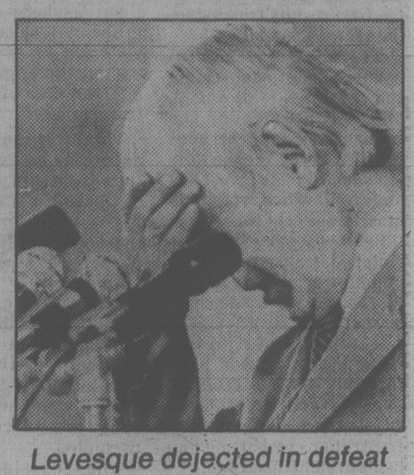

He said the No side won despite a "scandalously immoral" campaign. "But with the same serenity we showed in the campaign we have to swallow this defeat. It's harder than any electoral defeat and I've had my share.

By Levesque's side stood his wife Corinne Cote and cabinet minister Lise Payette whose Yvette insults at federalist women voting No was a turning point in the campaign.

The premier said the referendum shows Quebec is badly divided but asked Quebecers to try to put aside their differences. The Yes campaign was a model of national pride and openness to others, he said.

11 dead as mobs battle soldiers, police in Korea

KWANGJU (AP) — Huge mobs of anti-government demonstrators, some armed with machine-guns and rifles, battled soldiers and police in this South Korean city today. Army troops killed at least 11 persons and wounded 63 others as the protesters against martial law took control of almost the entire provincial capital 240 kilometres south of Seoul.

Meanwhile, Park Choong-hoon, a retired major-general who held several government posts and now is head of the Korea Traders Association, was named prime minister to replace Shin Hyon-hwack, who accepted responsibility for last week's bloody student riots and resigned with the rest of the cabinet Tuesday.

The martial-law command announced that the demonstrators had raided several armories containing hundreds of M-16 automatic rifles and M-1 carbines, along with ammunition and a number of light machine-guns. It said two machine-guns set up on top of the Chonnam University's hospital building were used to fire on troops.

The command said the protesters had more than 3,500 weapons and 46,000 rounds of ammunition. It estimated the number of demonstrators at 150,000, while other estimates placed the total at more than 200,000.

Eleven persons were confirmed dead at Kwangju Christian Hospital with at least 63 others, most with gunshot wounds, awaiting treatment. More victims were taken to other hospitals but their number was not known.

Total casualties from the shooting and clashes with soldiers and riot police today were estimated at 300.

The riots have centred in Kwangju for two reasons. It is the home area of dissident leader Kim Dae-jung, arrested Sunday in army sweeps after total martial law was declared. The area has a distinct cultural group that has historically been poorer, with its people treated as second-class citizens. South Korea's rapid industrialization has generally widened the gap between them and the rest of county.

Demonstrators patrolled the streets in commandeered buses and trucks asking for donations of blood. It was the fourth day of increasing protests in Kwangju and the death toll since Sunday rose to 24.

Martial law command Gen. Lee Hee-sung warned in a nationally broadcast statement that soldiers were authorized to act in their own defence and called on the demonstrators to end their protests.

Witnesses said paratroopers were on guard outside Kwangju's provincial government building and opened fire with M-16 automatic rifles when some of the demonstrators tried to drive into them with city buses they commandeered and an armored personnel carrier they stole from a factory. In addition to the armored personnel carrier and buses, they hijacked army jeeps and trucks and manoeuvred them into key positions around the city.

Volcanic lake still swelling

VANCOUVER, Wash. (UPI) — Thick clouds closed over the growing lake behind a 60-metre high mud wall on the north slope of Mount St. Helens today, preventing scientists from telling whether the natural dam was showing signs of crumbling and unleashing millions of gallons of water down the Toutle River valley.

The fog and overcast also brought rescue operations to a halt. (For the story of a Richmond couple's escape from the volcano see page 59.)

A Washington State Patrol outpost reported a rise of about 25 centimetres in the Toutle River during the night, but reported later that the river had been stable for several hours.

Some scientists have warned that in the "worst possible" case, the mud dam could collapse and send a torrent of floodwater through the Toutle valley and on through the cities of Longview and Kelso, 56 kilometres downstream. The 50,000 residents of the two cities were warned to be prepared for possible evacuation.

University of Washington seismologists reported earthquake activity on the mountain had decreased dramatically since Sunday's mighty eruption that laid down the 60-metre high plug at Spirit Lake and covered eastern Washington with volcanic dust.

"It could be going into dormancy, or it might just be resting after all the activity," spokeswoman Christina Boyko said.

But it was the danger of floodwaters that worried officials the most. They also said mudflows, possibly worse than those touched off by Sunday's fearsome blast, might be an additional problem.

The enormous cloud of grayish volcanic ash that stretched across the country dissipated to a haze over the eastern seaboard today, leaving in its path a gigantic cleanup operation and incalculable damage to farmland, rivers and personal property.

For the first time in two days, the sun trickled through intermittent clouds Tuesday in eastern Washington, hardest hit by the fallout of the slightly acidic and mineral-laden ash that blew into the air from 100 kilometres beneath the surface of erupting Mount St. Helens.

The ash storm was so severe that it stalled cars and closed schools and businesses in several Western states. People had to don special breathing masks.

Washington Gov. Dixy Lee Ray said damage from the volcano and soot was so extensive the amount couldn't be readily determined. She asked President Carter to declare the entire state a disaster area.

Milk price up next week

Victoria consumers can expect the price of milk to increase at least three cents a litre next week as the dairy industry passes along higher wage costs.

Teamster processors and drivers Tuesday ratified a new contract with the dairymen.

Milk prices will also go up on the Lower Mainland.

"I'm sure it would take in excess of three cents a litre to meet that (wage) package," said Jack Aird, marketing director for the Fraser Valley Milk Producers Association.

A three-cent hike would bring the price of a litre of milk to about 79 or 80 cents.

In Victoria, a spokesman for Island Farms Dairies said recent increases in packing costs and fuel prices also must be recovered.

Exact timing of the hikes had not yet been decided.

Teamster processors and drivers voted 67.73 per cent to accept across-the-board wage increases of 13 per cent for the first nine months and 11 per cent for the remainder of a two-year pact, with a cost-of-living adjustment clause to increase the second step if inflation exceeds 11 per cent next year.

Employers are the association which services most parts of B.C. with Dairyland products, and Palm and Silverwood dairies operating in the Vancouver area and Island Farms in Victoria.

Cracker-bomb fad has police worried

TORONTO (CP) — A 15-year-old boy maimed himself Monday when the firecracker he was building out of copper pipe and matches exploded.

But police said Joe Carnovale was fortunate because explosive gases escaped from the unclosed end of the pipe, instead of blasting him and his 12-year-old sister, who was watching, with shrapnel.

The blast blew off one of the boy's fingers and doctors were not sure they could save other mangled fingers.

Police are alarmed by this deadly new fad of making home-made firecrackers. On Saturday, an Alliston, Ont., boy was killed when a spark ignited the device he was building.

Post office strike streak snapped

OTTAWA (CP) — A strike-free tentative contract settlement between the government and the Canadian Union of Postal Workers was announced Tuesday night following six hours of intense top-level negotiations.

The agreement in principle on a new contract was revealed by Postmaster-General Andre Ouellet and union leader Jean-Claude Parrot, apparently ending a 15-year-old tradition of confrontation between the two parties that has led to at least wildcat strikes prior to agreement on every contract in the past.

A ratification vote by union members must still be held but officials were optimistic Tuesday.

The two men who personally led the talks behind closed doors would not reveal details of the pact, saying the contract language would be hammered out today.

But each said the settlement is based on the recommendations in a conciliation report which the union had said the government must accept as a minimum to avert a national postal strike.

Neither side put a price tag on the agreement but the key conciliation recommendations are for mainly financial benefits, including acceptance of the government's last wage offer, higher compensation for overtime, night and weekend shifts, restrictions on part-time workers and a special system to clean up unsettled grievances — many of them involving unpaid benefits to postal workers.

Most of these recommendations were rejected by the government's representative on the conciliation board on the grounds they were too expensive for the deficit-ridden post office but Ouellet apparently did not have the same hesitation. He got his mandate to get a quick settlement at a Monday cabinet meeting.

Ouellet showered praise on Parrot, calling him forceful but positive.

"These fruitful discussions were possible because of the spirit of co-operation on the part of the union," he said.

The history of confrontation that has traditionally marked relations between the two parties dates back to the mid-1960s, before government employees got the legal right to collective bargaining and to strike in 1967.

Every contract before now has been preceded by either a national postal strike, rotating strikes or wildcat walkouts. The last time, in 1978, legally striking postal workers were ordered back to work by Parliament.

A special salute to joys of summer

It's that time of year again.

"Lets keep the memory and the hope of that."

"Lets not give up or lose sight of the goal of equality between peoples which is legitimate and recognized by the world.

Thousands of supporters had gathered at the Paul Sauve Arena to celebrate a Yes victory. But minutes after the polls closed, as the first results trickled in, the crowd grew sullen.

As results were announced from each riding showing the No side ahead, boos erupted from the crowd. The loudest boos were reserved for the anglophone ridings of west end Montreal which voted almost 80 per cent No.

Red-eyed party workers clutched transistor radios to their ears, vainly hoping that the early No tide could be reversed.

Hundreds of Quebec flags in the crowds hung forlornly for most of the evening and disgruntled PQ supporters vented their frustrations by batting balloons around the arena.

The result with 21,614 of 22,013 polls reporting (98.2 per cent) before counting stopped for the night:

Yes: 1,478,200 (40.5 per cent)

No: 2,171,913 (59.5 per cent)

Results showed the federalist side with majorities in 94 of Quebec's 110 provincial ridings — including 55 ridings that elected Parti Quebecois members in the 1976 election — and victories in every region except the Saguenay-Lac St. Jean area of north-central Quebec.

Votes were not separated according to language, but there was every statistical indication French-speaking voters were split almost down the middle, with perhaps a slim majority voting no.

This assumes English-speaking Quebecers and other minorities — about 19 per cent of the Quebec population — gave the no side the massive support every pre-referendum poll predicted.

The yes side knew it would need the support of at least 60 per cent of French-speaking voters for a general majority, but its appeals for solidarity among this group went largely unheeded.

The vote brought good news from Canada's money markets. In a blockbuster response to the referendum result, the Toronto stock market soared almost 25 points in the first 15 minutes of trading today, later falling back with a 14.51 climb to put the industrial index level at 1902.26.

The Canadian dollar also surged strongly, posting a gain of 77/100 against its American counterpart. By noon the dollar was quoted at 86.31.

The question on the referendum ballot began with a long preamble and asked voters if they would give the PQ government a mandate to negotiate political sovereignty for Quebec, coupled with an economic common market with English Canada.

Levesque promised that a yes vote would give the Quebec government only a mandate to start talking with Ottawa and the nine other provinces, and sovereignty would come only if ratified in a second referendum.

Trudeau, who argued during the campaign that only a strong no vote in the referendum could lead to renewed federalism, said Tuesday he wants to get down to talks quickly.

"Now that we have reaffirmed our will to live together, we must apply ourselves without delay to the task of rebuilding our home to conform to the present needs of the Canadian family," he said in a televised address from Ottawa after Levesque and Ryan had spoken in Montreal.

"While there were many differences between the yes and no supporters in the referendum, all shared a desire for change. It is upon this desire for change that we must build a renewed Canadian federation. . .

"I hope that Mr. Levesque will agree to take part in this renewal."

Reading a prepared text in muted fashion, Trudeau said Quebecers face the immediate task of healing "the broken friendships, the strained family relationships, the hurt pride" that afflicted their society during the campaign.

Disappointed PQ supporters staged a four-hour demonstration march in Montreal after the referendum result was known. Though there were few instances of violence, riot police were called in to break up the protest.

But the night's outbreak was in contrast to the generally peaceful demeanor of the campaign. Just about the worst accusations of physical violence concerned posters that were torn down, although the rhetoric heated up to the point where Ryan accused his opponents of "fascist" tactics and Levesque called the federalist campaign "disgusting."

Week off for MLAs?

There is a good possibility the B.C. legislature will adjourn for a week in June to allow government ministers to make essential trips, government whip George Mussallem said today.

Mussallem said he has been working on such an ajournment for about three weeks.

Mussallem said arrangements still are being made for an ajournment, but said the week of June 9-13 would be pretty close.

Clouds hide lake's danger

It was announced that President Carter will fly to the Pacific Northwest tonight to inspect damage.

He is scheduled to fly to Portland, Ore., and remain overnight. On Thursday, he will go to Spokane, and later inspect damage in eastern Washington state caused by mud and ash from the mountain.

The 5,000-kilometre-long cloud drifted 8 to 11 kilometres high on a path that took it over Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, South Dakota, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Iowa, Missouri, Arkansas, Wisconsin, Illinois, Tennessee, Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, Kentucky, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Virginia, North Carolina, New York, and New England states.

Particulate matter in the air in eastern Washington and Idaho remained "far in excess of emergency levels" today, although declining from the initial fallout. Persons with respiratory problems were told to stay indoors.

About 66 per cent of the ash cloud consisted of glass-like silica dioxide, another 16 per cent was aluminum oxide with the rest made up of iron oxide, calcium oxide, potassium oxide and traces of cadmium, iron, copper and zinc.

In the East, the dissipating cloud created no health hazard just a "high haze of dust" resembling regular air pollution, a meteorologist said, which could result in vivid red and gold sunrises and sunsets.

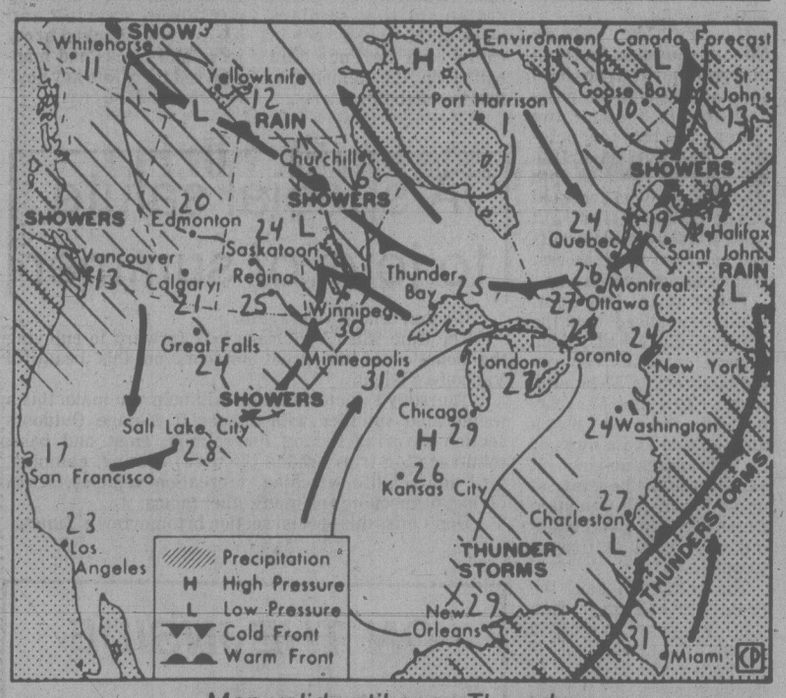

Residents in eastern Washington, Idaho and Montana swept the grime from their vehicles and driveways but were warned to use caution in washing the soot from lawns or crops because they could wind up with a "gummy mess."

Salmon fishing and fish hatcheries also will be affected.

Centre costly mistake?

Downtown businessman Antonio Sanchez has attacked the economic underpinnings of the waterfront convention centre to be built by the city and the provincial government.

"Theoretically, it is a concept that generates extra revenue," he said in a report to city council released on Tuesday.

But Sanchez, who runs Antonio's restaurant in Centennial Square, said the ones which have been built elsewhere are all white elephants subsidized by taxpayers.

"Generally, convention centres are built for symbolism, monumental extravagance, ignorance or political strategy."

He said if they were profitable then entrepreneurs in the private sector would have built lots of them already.

"The pattern of convention centres indicates that they are not originated to show profits but rather to benefit a few at the detriment of all."

He claimed the yearly deficit of $360,000 projected by the Pan-Pacific Trade and Conference Centre Society will be closer to $500,000 and the total cost will be closer to $10 million, 25 per cent higher than the society's estimate.

Interest on that much money would be $1.7 million annually, at 17 per cent plus the $360,000 deficit estimated by Pan-Pacific.

To justify the expense of more than $2 million a year in fixed charges, the centre should generate $16.5 million revenue, but estimated income is only $6.2 million, he said.

"Victoria taxpayers will bear an extra levy increase on the tax in the years to come, to make up for the deficit which may tend to increase rather than decrease.

Arne Lane, president of Pan-Pacific, the group of downtown businessmen which is putting together the convention centre project, used words like poppycock and preposterous to criticize the restaurateur's report.

"There are so many holes in what he's written," Lane said today. At one point, Sanchez says there won't be enough hotel rooms in the city to house the convention delegates attracted by the centre, then he says there won't be any benefit to Victoria.

Indians blast 'slow' gov't in clam poison death

HEALTH BAY, B.C. (CP) — Angry Nimpkish Indians are complaining that government officials reacted too slowly this holiday weekend when one band member died and others were sent to hospital after eating butterclams infected with red tide.

Band manager Alice Smith said the government should have sent in a helicopter when it first heard of the poisonings, not the fisheries vessel Chilco Post.

"It just seems like a nightmare to us," Smith said. "This young guy (Ernest Daniel Fred, 33) was working that day, painting a boat. Nothing was wrong.

"It hit him after he ate the clams. Suddenly, he felt numb all over. My daughter, the health worker here, was being called to see him at quarter to 12. You could see, just by looking at him, that he was already going.

"It took such a long time for the fisheries boat to get here," she said. "Other people were still getting sick. We didn't understand what was happening.

"That's why we want medical service sooner. They should respond to our request right away. They've got the means of getting here, like helicopters."

However, fisheries officer Barry Rosenberger said there is no helicopter stationed in the area for such service and the Chilco Post is the largest and fastest patrol vessel available.

According to the Chilco's log, the crew learned about the poisonings at 12:45 a.m. PDT Saturday when the vessel was cruising near Port Hardy on the northern tip of Vancouver Island. By 3:45 a.m. the Chilco had returned to its base at Alert Bay on Cormorant Island where two RCMP officers and a doctor boarded.

They arrived at Health Bay, on Gilford Island 40 kilometres northeast of Alert Bay, at 5:10 a.m. and took aboard three victims of paralytic shellfish poisoning. They arrived back in Alert Bay at 7:25 a.m.

Thirty-five minutes after the ship reached Alert Bay the fisheries ministry was broadcasting announcements that shellfish digging had been banned from Kelsey Bay to the northern tip of Vancouver Island.

Residents of two other shoreline communities near here have also reported symptoms associated with red tide. Nine were taken to hospital in Alert Bay.

Band councillor Jack Smith complained that when the band reported a red tide last summer it took a fisheries vessel two days to arrive.

"Aren't fisheries supposed to check the grounds when there's a new tide?" he asked. "Instead, I see them tied up most of the time or else touring around with cameras taking pictures."

Simple folk voted their wallets

Allan Fotheringham

MONTREAL — The problem, on this night, is that it is hard to disagree with Rene Levesque when he says that Quebec voters have given "them" one more chance.

The ball is back in the federalist court, as he said, and "them" — those Doubting Thomases who stretch from Bill Davis to Victoria — will have yet another try at getting serious about the not insurmountable problems of restructuring this country that promises so much and moves so slowly.

The fear, as the bitterly disappointed Levesque knows, is that the complacent legions of Anglophone Canada, having brushed its hands of this latest worrisome crisis will lapse into the same constitutional coma that followed the first two defeats of the Parti Quebecois (even though its percentage of the vote was steadily rising.)

The crushing personal defeat to the formidable Levesque ego won't help, if anyone lingers to gloat over it.

The tiny man with the large talent written off on first view with the usual cliche analysis of a Napoleonic complex, has been the only leader the PQ has had in its 13 years and he said in the final days of the campaign the only ambition he had left was to win this vote.

In the dying hours, in his own riding, he entered an office pool and wrote his prediction — 61 per cent Yes — on a blackboard. That he failed was not unexpected. How he failed was devastating.

There was hardly a category in the electorate — outside the stubbornly independent Saguenay-Lac St. Jean, where the Yes forces could muster more than 50 per cent of voters.

Even in the Montreal PQ ridings, which form the fuel and the fervor of government support, the Yes side won only 43.5 per cent.

Even in ridings that contained more than 90 per cent French-speaking voters the Yes side could win only 46.3 per cent.

It could be predicted, naturally, that the western island of Montreal would vote as low as 23.5 per cent Yes, or that Outaouais, that haven of civil servants across the river from Ottawa, would return only 28.5 per cent Yes.

But the PQ ridings could muster only 46 per cent, the ridings containing PQ ministers just 48 per cent.

The charge that Claude Ryan, in his old fashioned mom and pop, church basement meetings, was appealing to only the rural folk didn't wash.

Rural ridings voted only 37.9 per cent Yes, but urban ridings showed nearly the same distaste with only 38.3 per cent.

High-income ridings, as could be expected, voted only 34 per cent Yes. But low-income ridings, perhaps frightened of the consequences, came up with only 41 per cent.

If it was devastating for Levesque, it must be oblivion for Claude Morin, the clever pipe-smoking minister of inter-governmental affairs who devised the Trojan Horse: the oblique approach to separation by many-disguised phases, asking first for a mandate to discuss the idea of a mandate for independence.

In the end, as surveys demonstrated, the PQ outclevered itself. The subtle nuances of sovereignty-association were grasped by the intellectuals, artists, students and journalists who form the base of PQ support — but mystified the simple folk who, in the polling booth, voted their wallets.

Still, the federal forces did not really have to superimpose a heavy-handed "non-merci" campaign that supposedly was to combat the evils of alcoholism but really was aimed as a subliminal hint on the referendum.

They really didn't have to send out early, on the excuse that there might be a postal strike, pension and baby bonus cheques as a nudge-nudge, wink-wink from Ottawa.

The feds, as Levesque charged, did not play by the rules of the game as laid down.

The ball, as he said, is in Ottawa's court. The real test — now that the PQ has lost its test — is whether the federal Liberals are sincere about giving up some of their precious power.

In that sense, the Quebec that was promised change if it voted No last night, was voting as much for the other provinces as it was for itself.

Diploma diplomacy

PEKING (AP) — In an attempt to relieve overcrowding in Chinese colleges, a Peking university that broadcasts its studies over public television has offered to grant diplomas to anyone who takes the courses or studies on his own and then passes a final exam.

University President Guan Shixiong wrote in the Peking Daily that the diplomas will be available even if the applicant is not formally enrolled in the school and that the certificates will be recognized by the state.

The first battle won

The rejoicing was loud across Canada last night.

The clear-cut victory of the 'no' forces in the Quebec referendum on sovereignty-association prompted many comments about the rejuvenation of federalism, about the commitment Quebecers have now made to Confederation, even about the new tide of unity sweeping across Canada.

The emotional reaction is itself worth a great deal.

Canadians across the country, as well as those in Quebec, have been forced through the challenge of the referendum to examine their feelings about Canada.

In the words of a Canadian songwriter, Joni Mitchell, "you don't know what you've got till it's gone," and the threat of a 'yes' vote brought Canadians close enough to losing what they have that they began to appreciate it anew.

That renewed appreciation was seen in numerous ways: in the million-plus signatures on a petition from English-Canada urging Quebecers to stay in Confederation; in a rush of understanding by non-Quebecers for the thousands of Quebecois gathered at the giant 'no' rallies held in the last week; in agreements from politicians across the country to participate in meaningful constitutional reform, should the 'no' side win.

And finally it was seen in Quebec in the way that mattered most of all: in the defeat of the separatist option by all Quebecers, but most especially by the francophones. Analysts in Quebec believe that all socio-economic groups voted over-all in favor of the 'no' option, as did all regions of the province except one.

It was indeed a fine victory for Canada.

Yet it is perhaps of more importance than ever that Canadians realize that this victory was a single battle and not, by any stretch of the imagination, the end of the war.

The war is against the alienation and cynicism which the current system has produced not only in Quebec, but also in other regions of Canada, including the west.

It is a war that will be won only when Canada possesses a new form of Confederation which will realize the diverse goals of Canada's diverse regions while still preserving the national spirit found during the referendum campaign.

It will not be easy. As Canadians savor the emotional relief of the referendum result, they should be aware that the comfortable old ways of Confederation are gone.

Claude Ryan led his 'no' forces to victory with a clear message: Quebec does not have to leave Canada to fulfill its destiny. But let there be no doubt that his view of Quebec's destiny is not limited to cultural and linguistic aspirations. He sees a radical change in the whole idea of the federal-provincial partnership within Confederation.

Many premiers share some of his ambitions for their own provinces. In effect, the 'no' vote was a yes vote for their aspirations to reform the Canadian federation by a significant shift of power from Ottawa to the regions.

Into the hands of this disparate group of provincial premiers, some perhaps wise and others less so, has fallen the potential to improve or damage the concept called Canada.

Human and natural eruptions

Two eruptions shook the United States this past weekend; one was natural, the other man-made.

Kitty-corner across the continent from Mount St. Helens' sky-high plume of ash and gas, racial rioting broke out in the predominently black Miami suburb of Liberty City.

Both eruptions were violent, both brought death and destruction, and both were uncontrollable. Sunday night, after widespread looting, scores of fires and 15 people dead, a police officer in Miami said: "We've almost given up trying to protect property. It's totally out of control, it's survival out there."

Mount St. Helens had lain dormant for 123 years before unleashing the awesome forces stored within its depths.

Rioting in the magnitude that struck the streets of Miami was last seen during the Detroit riots in 1968 and the Los Angeles Watts riot in August 1965.

Nature held her tongue for over a century. But the release of pent-up hostilities within men are more frequent. Although mountains offer few examples of volcanic eruptions, it seems probable that their secrets will be explored, controlled and perhaps harnessed before solutions are found to human eruptions.

RICHARD GWYN

Choice between two heroes

OTTAWA — Pierre Trudeau has surprised us so often that it seems foolish to confess that he has surprised us once again. But last night he did: by his tenderness towards his enemy.

"There ought to be no limit to my joy tonight," Trudeau said in his TV speech following the results of the referendum.

Then he set strict limits to his joy. He could not, Trudeau said, "put out of my mind all the Yes supporters who fought with such conviction. This disappointment prevents me from entering unreservedly into a spirit of satisfaction."

Later, after he had called on Canadians to accept the need for constitutional change now that Quebecers had voted so massively for federalism, Trudeau appealed directly to Quebec Premier Rene Levesque, "to take part in this renewal."

Ottawa's turn

Earlier in the evening, Levesque, his elfin face crushed, his voice breaking, had come out on the stage of the Paul Sauve Arena in Montreal and, after the crowd of Yes supporters at last had quietened, had said, "Let's admit it, the ball has been sent back to the federalists' court."

Quebecers had decided, Levesque continued, "to give federalism another chance." It was the duty now, "of the federalists and above all of Mr. Trudeau," to make use of that chance to deal honorably with Quebecers.

Listening to these two speeches, spaced about three-quarters of an hour apart, the one given in Ottawa and the other in Montreal, it was easy to believe that Trudeau and Levesque were carrying on a private conversation with each other.

This, in most of the ways that matter, is what they were doing.

Politically, Trudeau and Levesque have been enemies for the last two decades. But their emnity has always possessed a particular dignity.

Although their means had been opposed, their ends had been identical. Levesque has tried to take Quebec out of Canada, in order to preserve its language and culture. Trudeau, in order to preserve the language and culture of French-Canadians, has tried to keep Quebec within Canada.

Their careers haven't been just interwined but have been interdependent. Time and again, the success or failure of one of them has reinforced the success, or has magnified the failure, ot the other.

In 1976, Levesque's election victory implanted upon Trudeau the halo of Savior of Canada and sent his popularity soaring to 51 per cent, the highest he's ever reached. In reverse, following Trudeau's defeat in the 1979 election, Levesque lost four successive byelections the same fall. In reverse yet again, after Trudeau's election triumph of last February, Levesque's popularity climbed too, in the latest polls, a post-1976 high of 65 per cent.

Each is loved by Quebecers, often by the same Quebecers, for different reasons. Trudeau, the cerebral world statesman, represents to Quebecers the best that is in them. Levesque, rumpled, passionate, often full of doubts but not afraid to express them, represents to Quebecers what they are.

Quebecers this time were forced to choose between their two heroes. Francophone Quebecers divided their votes evenly; anglophone voters gave the victory to the federalists.

For francophone Quebecers, such a choice is painful to have to make. In their speeches, Trudeau and Levesque each tried consciously to ease the pain. Trudeau restrained his joy because of the "disappointment" of the Yes supporters. Levesque told his audience, "We have to swallow, even if it's not easy."

Private affair

Watching the two of them fight for the affection of Quebecers during a contest of which the results would determine the future of confederation has made the rest of us in English Canada feel like voyeurs to a private affair.

But Trudeau showed us where we fitted into the affair. Just the holding of the referendum, said Trudeau, "has forced all Canadians to think more profoundly about who we are."

And Levesque showed Trudeau how to fit us together. During the campaign, to counter Levesque's appeal to Quebec patriotism, Trudeau invoked the wider patriotism of Canada, of the Maple Leaf flag and of O Canada. To discover in Trudeau, the lifelong anti-nationalist, a broad streak of nationalism is the biggest surprise of all.

WALTER STEWART

Reclaiming the economy

OTTAWA — In Room 334 of the West Block of Parliament, a new industrial strategy for Canada is being shaped.

It is coming together, in large measure, behind the beetling brows and beneath the cropped haircut of Herb Gray, Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and MP for Windsor West.

Gray, an earnest, intelligent and — this is the key point — steadfast advocate of a national industrial strategy, has made the greatest political comeback this side of Pierre Elliott Trudeau.

More to the point, his views, and those of a group of like-minded, small "l" Liberal colleagues, are carrying the day. The consequences for Canada are profound, and will begin to be felt this fall.

FIRA re-shaped

For starters, Gray has his staff working on amendments to the legislation directing the Foreign Investment Review Agency.

This is only proper. It was the 1971 Gray Report, lamenting the decline of Canadian control over the native economy, that led to the establishment of FIRA.

But Gray was never happy with the agency, whose powers were severely limited after he lost an in-cabinet battle with his more conservative colleagues. The agency became mainly cosmetic, its duties restricted to releasing the list of the latest takeovers of Canadian firms.

Nationalism was viewed dimly when FIRA became a fact in 1973, and the view grew even dimmer until, in August, 1974, Gray, then minister of consumer and corporate affairs, was chucked ignominiously out of the Trudeau cabinet.

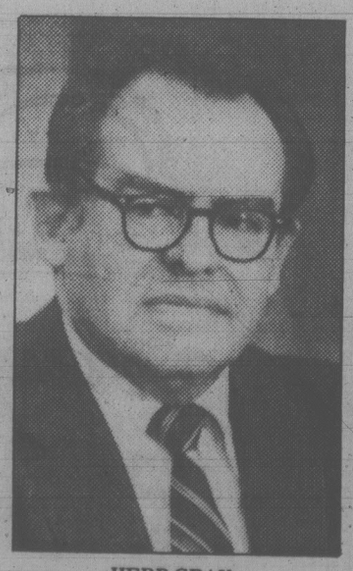

The stated reason was that he did not "communicate well," but as a Liberal backbencher, Gray showed how wrong that was. He communicated extremely well with a daily barrage of questions and complaints directed at his former colleagues. He lambasted the Liberals for everything from dropping milk subsidies to neglecting railway safety standards.

And, ever and anon, he reminded the House of Commons that this nation had no industrial strategy, and needed one.

May 22, 1979, when the Trudeau government was defeated was, all things considered, a red-letter day for Gray. He won his Windsor West riding handily, as he has been doing since 1962. He moved into formal — as opposed to informal — opposition. And he was handed a club with which to beat his own party over the head.

That's not what he says, of course. What he says, this glum-looking, soft-spoken man who chooses his words as carefully as if they were dubious fruit, is that, "A number of us had argued that when the Liberal party turns its back on its small 'l' Liberal backers, the electorate turns its back on the party."

The lesson didn't sink into the party leadership until about half-way through the election that returned

HERB GRAY
. . . starting with FIRA

Trudeau to power this Feb. 18. Trudeau began to make speeches sounding very much like Herb Gray.

After the election, Gray, to his delight, was handed the industry, trade and commerce portfolio. He began at once, with the dogged thoroughness that marks his every move, to press his arguments.

As a result, the key section of the Throne Speech dealing with the economy bore the Windsor West MP's imprint.

Now the time has come to put the government's muscle where its mouth was in the Throne Speech and, once more, Gray is in the middle of the action.

He hopes to have three major changes ready for FIRA this fall.

— The agency's greatest weakness is that it can only review takeovers, not examine the operations of foreign firms already in Canada. He proposes periodic reviews of major foreign firms — most of them U.S. corporations — to find out how they are behaving themselves. "There will be no mandatory rules to enforce such things as larger exports or more research and development" he says. "But we will make the results known, and bring pressure to bear."

— Takeover bids will be publicized before the transactions take place, so that if a Canadian firm wants to step in with a rescue bid, it will be able to do so.

— "There will be a financial facility, in the form of loan guarantees, to help fend off takeovers."

Reforming FIRA, as Gray acknowledges, does not an industrial strategy make. However, "You can't wait until you have this whole seamless thing in shape. You have to start somewhere and plunge ahead."

There will also be a national trading corporation — such as is found in almost every industrial nation — to handle state-to-state agreements. The form of this trading corporation is far from clear. Gray asks, "Should it be wholly government-owned, or a mixed government and private operation, or a private operation with government financing?" He doesn't know. All he knows is that he hopes to have a task-force working on the options soon.

Auto Pact

In addition, he has already set in motion steps to renegotiate the Automotive Trade Agreement with the United States, another major link in industrial strategy.

Other elements to the industrial strategy, which, he insists, "Is not mine, but the approach of a number of like-minded people in the cabinet and party," include stablizing energy policy — "With at least 50-per-cent Canadian ownership of resource firms by 1990" — mounting manpower and industrial skills programs, and increasing emphasis on areas, such as electronics, where Canada already has considerable expertise.

Gray's approach envisions an active, interventionist government, and he knows he will meet opposition on both sides of the House of Commons. He is used to that.

Confusing mail

In the April 8 issue of the Victoria Times, an article appeared which explained why much of our mail does not arrive at our destinations. However, it does not give me the full explanation as to why, when I have consistently sent change of address cards to our governments, being positively certain to be sure that the postal code has been changed, our governmental pension cheques, which come through to the correct address, still carry the incorrect postal code.

I know that computers cannot read, but those who feed the computers can, so how come the address is appearing on all these governmental letters and cheques but the old postal code is not? If, as the gentleman stated, change of address cards do not go through, then how come my husband and I receive our pension cheques after our move last November? Mail from the United States of America to whom we have never written comes to our new address with proper and correct postal code, but our own Canadian postal mail sometimes goes astray or carries incorrct postal codes. I hope the gentleman will answer through your paper for all readers of Victoria to read and understand. — Mrs. T. Riding, 918 Collinson Street.

Belated thanks

The heart-warming story by Arthur Mayse about the Florenda Joy drama of 11 years ago reminded me that Arthur Mayse is quite a guy.

When I dipped a timid toe into regional book publishing in 1962, Arthur was always there with encouragement.

In 1967 I had a manuscript with a West Coast story. Ottawa's Centennial Commission was phoning for our decision to publish. It was a pressure situation. The author's grant from Ottawa depended upon his finding a publisher quickly. I did not want to let him down, yet I hesitated as one chapter had a hint of libellous connotations.

So I called on Arthur at the Times. He put his own work aside, bless his soul, and studied the suspect chapter. From his depth of experience he suggested a slight change in a quotation, a tender touch here and there and he restored my own confidence.

We published, the author received his grant and we survived. But we never thanked Arthur Mayse properly. — Gray Campbell, 455 Cromas Road, Sidney.

Wolf killing

I would like to ask the Director of the Fish and Wildlife Branch of the B.C. government what distinguishes a wolf killing for food from a cattle rancher shipping his cattle off to be killed for food. So much for the moral justification for the poisoning.

I am not disputing that some kind of control of wild animal populations is sometimes necessary — after our civilization has interfered with the balance of nature — but I question the methods.

The B.C. Pesticides Control Board grants a permit for using a poison during the development of which many innocent animals had to die in laboratory tests. Now the wolves and coyotes and all kinds of animals that happen to come across the poison will also have to die in great agony. Poisoning and trapping belong to a mentality of the Middle Ages, and if the people manufacturing and administering the poison would have a taste of their own medicine, they would probably agree.

What bothers me is that the representatives of the churches, of which Victoria has so many, do not speak up; have animals no part in the philosophical/religious scheme of nature to which we all belong? It also bothers me that officials who have been elected by a portion of B.C.'s population to protect the environment, can get away with messing it up for three long years in favor of a private organization, the cattleman's association. Surely in this day and age there are alternative ways possible to protect cattle: guards could be hired or bothersome wolves tranquilized and transferred to more remote parts of B.C. — Lisa Hlavac, 985 Oliver Street.

Postal service

The letter from Rory R. Rickwood contains a lot of factual information. There are several points though that I would like to clarify.

The machines that have been installed in major postal plants across Canada cannot "home in" on street addresses but can sort to codes. So any mail that does not contain the postal code is rejected by the machines and is sent for manual sortation. Coded, machineable mail does take priority and that is why Canada Post has recommended to all mailers that they use the postal code on all their mail including their return address.

First class mail that is rejected because it does not contain the posta' code or is not machineable for other reasons still receives first class handling as there are always some postal clerks working manual sortation.

Without the postal code and the mechanized plants it is doubtful that Canada Post would be able to provide the same standard of service with yearly mail volumes over the six billion mark. In any industry there is a normal error factor of around three per cent but in Canada Post, where 25 million pieces of mail are handled on a daily basis, an error factor of less than one per cent could leave a lot of unhappy customers. It is only through the hard work and dedication of postal workers such as Mr. Rickwood and the co-operation of most of our customers in using the postal code that makes it possible for Canada Post to provide a high level of service. The use of the postal code is increasing which means the mechanized plants are able to handle tremendous volumes of mail without undue delays.

If readers wish information on any of the services provided by Canada Post or if they wish to contact the post office in Greater Victoria for any reason please call 388-3141 or write to Customer Service, Victoria Post Office, 203-1230 Government St., Victoria, B.C. V8W 2Y8. — L. E. Sawyer, Acting Manager, B.C. and Yukon Postal District.

Is Reagan fit to be president?

By HENRY FAIRLIE
The Washington Post

At the beginning of this year's election campaigns, the question of Ronald Reagan's age was openly and often mentioned, and as often as not was hotly debated. Today one would think that the issue had been resolved, and that the verdict had been pronounced in his favor. Anyone who raises sharply the fact that old age is closing rapidly on him is made to feel a little gauche.

This seems to happen more and more in the primary campaigns. As the process of nominating a candidate goes on its long and cumbersome way, the question of a candidate's fitness to be president is submerged by the more immediate question of his ability to survive the primary ordeal, the qualities needed for the one being very different from those required for the second. The all-important question of presidential capacity is postponed to the general election, when it is of course too late for either of the parties to change its nominee.

One would have thought that the closer Reagan draws to the nomination, the more piercing and controversial the question of his age becomes, but in fact this is the very opposite of what happens in the present system. It is assumed that his victories prove that he is not too old to be his party's candidate, and whether he is, nonetheless, too old to be president is put aside to be decided at a later date.

In accordance with their traditional impulse not to kick a man when he is up, even the most unexpected Americans are today anxious to show that they can be amiable about Ronald Reagan. I am one of those who cannot join them in this exercise in forbearance. He seems to me today to be as banal a figure as ever to be considered as leader of the free world, and I have no doubt that many of his policies would hurt and neglect those whom his politics ought to protect and succor. His age is by no means my only objection to him.

But how can anyone deny that his age is a legitimate issue in this election? That is one side of the question. And how can the new forbearance of him obscure the fact that his age is a disqualification? That is the second side of the issue.

Let us first be rid of the sillier comparisons with figures from the past. Yes — oh, yes! — Winston Churchill remained in office during the Second World War past the age of 70. But the British people then bundled him out of power at the first opportunity, and even before the war against Japan had been won, so what conclusion (one way or the other) could one draw from that? Yes — oh, yes! — he was then returned to office when he was almost past the age of 77, and did not finally resign (and then only with great reluctance) until he was already an octogenarian. But it is not until now that I have ever heard Churchill's second ministry put forward as a model for our emulation.

The accounts from his ministerial colleagues at the time were hilarious, and would have been alarming if they had not done much of the governing for him. One of the reasons why the memoirs of his doctor, Lord Moran, caused such a scandal was that they presented, in detail and mercilessly, so gross a picture of senility in office.

The final years of Charles de Gaulle in power were no more reassuring. It does not matter to what example one looks — Konrad Adenauer is obviously another — old age in power is always troubling. It is a time of interregnum — even if the old man has just taken power — and of uncertainty about the future. It is always a period of stubbornness at the top — old men are not easily moved — and of restlessness in those meant to serve him, as they prepare to profit from the succession.

There is less loyalty in the administrations of old men than in any other, less disposition to cooperate and make plans with the intention of executing them. Dictators almost always cling to power beyond the time of their usefulness, and the memoirs of their regimes tell vividly of the atmosphere of dissolution and personal hostilities.

It is the same whenever an old man holds the reins. But at least when one speaks of a Churchill or a de Gaulle or an Adenauer, one is talking of men who have held and may still hold the reins, and who merely believe that power should be continued on to them as long as it is their fancy. The people are willing to re-elect him because he is at least a known quantity — "the Chief," "the old boy," "Winnie" — and his colleagues are used to serving him and to circumventing his mischiefs.

Old Men Forget was the title which David Duff Cooper gave to his political memoirs — perhaps one of the 30 greatest political autobiographies in any language — and one thing which old men forget to do is to resign. It is usually easier to allow them to stay on than to get out the hatchets to dispose of them. But what is one to make of an old man who actually wants to hold the highest office for the first time?

We often overlook the fact that very few men or women wish and set out to be president or prime minister. Think back to your class in high school or college, and you will be hard put to remember one who ever entertained such an ambition. Log cabins are simply not populated with children who wish to make it to the White House. Rail-splitters would usually prefer to be chairman of the railroad company than president of the United States.

One in fact has to be rather odd to want to be president at all. One must be that much odder to pursue the presidency for the first time at an age when one could retire with contentment and honor.

Those who want to get to the top of the greasy pole, as Disraeli called it, must be prepared to claw and clamber to keep their place on it. There is nothing honorific in the possession of great power. It is a merciless occupation, often for 24 hours a day, with doubtful rewards. To rule is not the same as to reign, and when to reign also meant to rule, there was not much enjoyment or reward in it either.

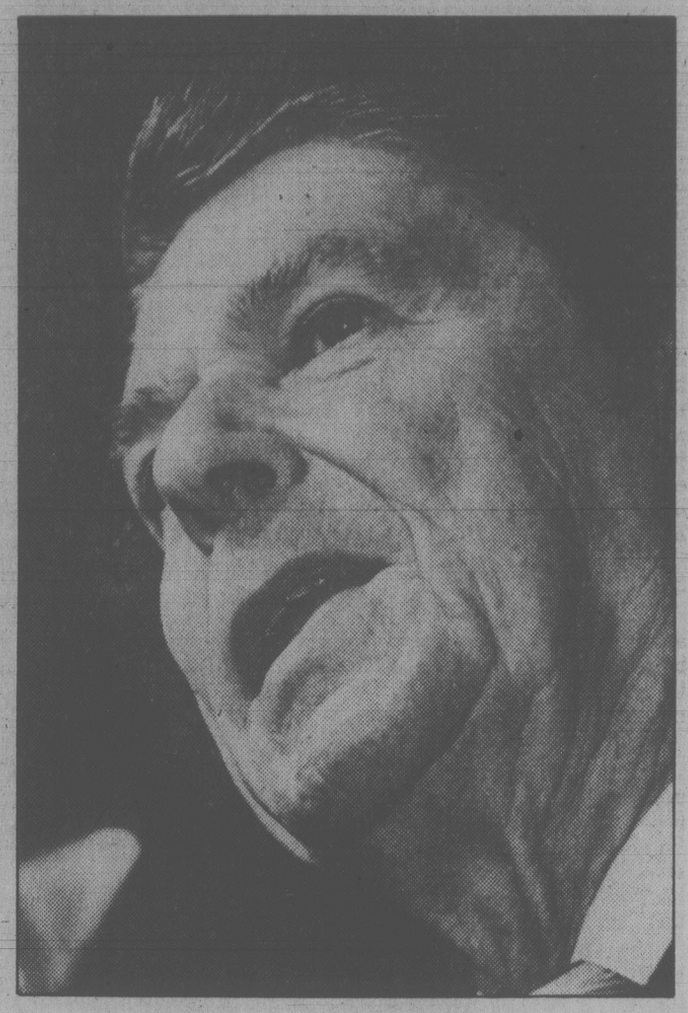

The old man who wants the highest office for the first time is hoping to reign. He wants an Oscar bestowed on him, not for his talents in his profession, for he has won none for those, but simply for being around a long time. He wants it for true grit. He wants to be crowned and enthroned, and then to make progresses through his realm.

This is exactly how Ronald Reagan has sought the presidency — the "eleventh commandment" is the plea of a man who wishes to be crowned by acclamation and not elected in a political rough-and-tumble — and it is the most ominous consequence of his age. It means that yet again an attempt will be made to govern as if the presidency is not a political office. The need for vital political decisions will again be obscured by the effort to reign by amiable royal proclamations. Neither the U.S. nor the free world can afford yet another presidency which tries to escape the hardness of political decisions.

To this confused old man's view of politics will be added the usual stubbornness of old men when they hold the highest office. He will not rule; neither will he reign. He will merely try to reign by substitutes for the royal touch.

The hard business of hammering out and forging new instruments of power, which will survive the president's term of office and fit the political needs of a new generation, which is the most important business to which a politician can attend, will again be postponed, as it has been in America for 40 years. Ronald Reagan in his old age does not promise to rule the nation but to sanctify it, and Americans will discover too late that they elected only a shroud from which the image has faded.

I do not fear that Reagan will take America into an unnecessary war. That is not the way of old men. I fear that America will become what in effect he promises. It will be one great Lourdes, a land in which crutches sprout like forests, because the people have finally been made too supine to need even them.

Pensions: It needed to be done

An Editorial

The anger of British Columbia's provincial civil servants, municipal employees and teachers at the way the governent has gone about restricting the indexing of their pensions to the cost of living is fully justified. In failing to consult fully those affected before bringing in legislation to institute changes, the government was rude, arrogant, and plain foolish.

Even if Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe felt it would have been impossible to get the agreement of the public service unions to the kind of alterations he had in mind, he should at least have made the attempt. Now he has not only their disagreement, but their distrust.

But in scoring the government's hamhanded approach it is important not to lose sight of what it is trying to do. It is facing a problem that has been dodged too long: the danger of the pension system's being undermined by one of its most attractive features.

As desirable as it may be to protect pensions from the robbery of inflation, there is not much point in open-ended indexing if its end result is to bankrupt the kitty. That is what has to happen if not enough money is going in to pay for indexing, and the people who are going to be hurt are those whom it is intended to benefit.

If, as Mr. Wolfe says, the pension plans concerned are more than $1 billion short of the amount that will be needed to meet their long-term commitments, at a time when our society faces the prospect of a diminishing work force supporting an increasing number of retiring workers, writing blank pension cheques that will be filled in according to the Consumer Price Index is an invitation to disaster.

Whether the government has chosen the right way to put the pension schemes on a sounder financial basis is something that needs to be debated. It can legitimately be argued that the plans would be in better shape today if they had been administered with more care in the past and if the workers involved had had more say in their management. But the government deserves credit for acting with the objective of saving them, not destroying them.

In proposing controls on the amounts to be paid out the government is not depriving the public sector employees of anything that is available to those in the private sector. Indexing of pensions has made the public sector employees a favored group by comparison. It is unfair to expect their employer, the taxpayer, to bail out a leaking ship he cannot climb aboard. It is fair, as the administrator of a forest industry pension scheme said the other day, "that the people who are going to be getting the pension benefits should pay for them."

It may be that the public servants are prepared to put more into their pensions to maintain a higher degree of protection against inflation. Mr. Wolfe should be prepared to listen to any and all suggestions for improvements, and incorporate the best in his legislation.

The ultimate answer, of course, is to lower inflation to a level where protection from it becomes unnecessary. That may be beyond the control of this government, but it has certainly not helped matters by overtaxing the province to finance record spending this year.

A government that would do that obviously needs help in managing pensions. Though their anger is justified, spokesmen for the public sector employees and the labor movement generally would do better to offer constructive suggestions than issue threats.

NEW YORK — I never watch shows that give a misleading impression of the people they deal with, so naturally I passed up Death of a Princess the other night after Saudi Arabia announced that it gave a wrong impression of life in the oil-rich kingdom.

For the same reason, I didn't go to see Cruising, which, judging from the public demonstrations against it, gave a bad impression of the homosexual life. I am not going to see the new Charlie Chan movie either because, though it hasn't been made yet, Americans of Chinese origin say Charlie Chan is an affront to Chinese culture.

Unfortunately, I did see some Charlie Chan movies 40 years ago, but I was too young to know better. For the same reason, I went to see Hamlet in 1947. However, I have never seen it since, and never intend to, now that Danes have told me it gives a very bad impression of life in Denmark.

I walked out of The Godfather after the first 30 minutes when I realized it was giving a misleading impression of Italian family life, and dropped War and Peace like a 10-pound sack of potatoes after it became obvious that Tolstoy was giving a completely lopsided impression of Napoleonic France.

Does this reflect an undue sensitivity to the feelings of others? It might have seemed so once, but that was before I felt for myself the sting these misleading entertainments can produce. Which brings us to Ralph Bellamy.

I refer, of course, to the movie Ralph Bellamy and not to the stage Ralph Bellamy who, as Franklin D. Roosevelt in Sunrise at Campobello, swept everything before him with his mighty decency. The movie Ralph Bellamy, as graybeards and late-night TV addicts will remember, never swept anything before him.

In movie after movie Ralph Bellamy was the man who didn't get the girl in the end. And why? Because Ralph Bellamy was polite and kind and gentle.

It is still embarrassing to confess — such is the grotesque power of movies to make you ashamed of your own culture — but I identified with Ralph Bellamy. I was polite, kind and gentle, too. Not that I wanted to be, mind you. I wanted to be sassy like Clark Gable or sullen like Humphrey Bogart, but my attempts invariably resulted in a punch in the nose; I was forced to take the polite, kind and gentle route as a matter of survival.

Well, the humiliations were constant. As soon as Bellamy walked on the screen and told Irene Dunne, "I have the honeymoon suite on the Berengaria, dear," the entire audience broke into snickers. Everybody was thinking: "That poor polite, kind and gentle sap — too dumb to realize that Irene is going to be in Cary Grant's arms when the Berengaria sails tonight."

I forced a snicker, too, to show I was a regular guy, but it hurt, friends. It hurt. What that movie was saying to me was: "You are the effete product of an inferior culture."

In some movies Ralph planned to take his mother along on the Berengaria because Ralph, you see, liked his mother. He respected her. He called her "Mother," not "Mom." He didn't refer to his mother as "the old lady." She was "Mother." And everybody laughed. People who had mothers were ridiculous and couldn't get the girl; that's what the movie was saying.

Well, you guess right; I had a mother. What's more, I didn't call her "the old lady." I liked my mother. I respected her. I was, in short, a loser. No girl for me at the end. Nothing but the awful loneliness of that honeymoon suite on the Berengaria as Irene and Cary embraced on the dock and my mother asked, "Why in the world did you order all that champagne?" while the audience hooted with delight.

Cary Grant didn't have a mother. Clark Gable didn't have a mother. Humphrey Bogart didn't have a mother. James Cagney, to be sure, had a mother once, but she was a murderous old gunslinger and he called her "Ma," not "Mother," and honored her by getting blown up on top of a gas-storage tank while screaming, "Top of the world, Ma!"

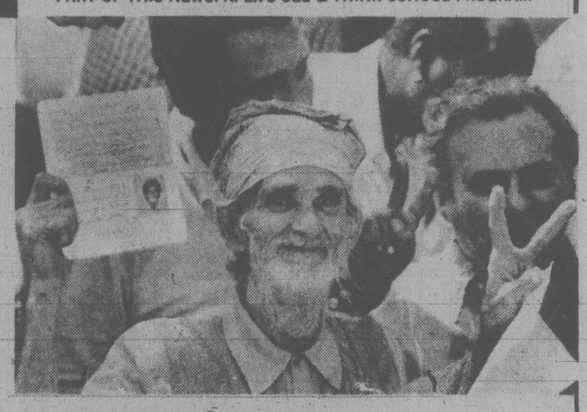

Ralph Bellamy movies were as commonplace as Charlie Chan movies, and in the terrible fashion of these things the unfair and distorted stereotype began to affect my behavior. I became politer, kinder and gentler with the passing years, and lost more and more girls in the end.

Politeness, kindness and gentleness became my way of life and the good times passed me by. Politeness, kindness and gentleness are why I never see a show or read a book that anybody doesn't want me to see or read and why I have to make my own good times playing solitaire and looking for funny names in the telephone directory.

Manitoba town threatened

SNOW LAKE, Man. (CP) — Women and children began moving out of this remote northern Manitoba community today when forest fires threatened to move in.

Mayor Mary Semaniuk said quite a few families have already left but she did not know how many.

All 2,000 residents were urged to leave after a fire spread to within 20 kilometres of this town 500 kilometres north of Winnipeg.

The town's only school is closed.

Rod Cotton, a conservation officer, described the situation as critical.

Two fires are north of the town and another is raging to the east, not far from the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co. Ltd. mine. Mine superintendent Stan Westlake said about two tons of dynamite were removed from a magazine at Chisel Lake as a precaution.

Of greatest concern is a large fire to the south that has been travelling at the rate of three kilometeres an hour.

Mayor Semaniuk said the forecast of a west wind today prompted officials to try to evacuate the community.

The winds today are light and will pose no threat so long as they continue to blow from the southeast.

While no official evacuation order has been issued, residents are being encouraged to move to the nearby communities of Flin Flon and The Pas.

Semaniuk said about 1,000 people have left town in private vehicles. She added the town has four buses ready should an emergency evacuation be necessary.

Officials in The Pas and Flin Flon said most Snow Lake residents arriving in the two communities are staying with friends and relatives. Others are being put up in halls until they can be billeted.

Father, son die in airborne game

KITCHENER, Ont. (CP) — An airborne contest organized by a Stratford, Ont., flying club ended in death for two of its players when two of the 10 planes involved collided in mid-air over a residential area Tuesday night.

Waterloo Regional Police were withholding the names of the victims, believed to be a father and son from the London, Ont., area, who were in one of two single-engined planes that were approaching Waterloo-Wellington airport when they collided six kilometres west of it.

The pilot of the other plane was able to make an emergency landing on a road.

The 10 light planes left Stratford airport in the Perth County Flying Club's poker run, in which pilots were to fly to the Waterloo-Wellington airport and then back again after picking up a sealed envelope holding a card to make up a poker hand.

But once over Kitchener, witnesses said, three of the planes seemed to be close together.

"Very suddenly two of the planes entwined in each other and started going straight down in a spiral," said Paul Motz, who was coaching a youngster's T-ball game when he spotted the three planes.

"One of the planes managed to break away and, in a very wobbly way, levelled out. The other plane continued to spiral and hit the ground."

The plane missed a senior citizens' home, but crashed in the front lawn of Hunter Brown. Valerie Ludwig, 16, was standing in a nearby driveway when her hair and jacket caught fire from flying debris.

Neighborhood residents tried to extinquish the blazing wreckage with garden hoses and clawed at debris with rakes and shovels to try to rescue the pilot and passenger.

David Johnstone, who watched the planes in flight, said they appeared to be dogfighting when he saw the propeller of one slice into the cab of the other. The two become entangled and one plunged to earth.

CP Rail cancels cruise to Alaska

CP Rail has cancelled the Friday sailing of the cruise ship Princess Patricia from Vancouver to Alaska because of a strike threat by licensed officers.

Ray Purdy, general manager of CPR's coastal marine operations, said today subsequent sailings will also be cancelled if the dispute with the officers continues.

The company's action stemmed from an announcement Tuesday from the officers' negotiating committee that the Patricia would be idled if there was no settlement in sight by Friday.

The 75 officers have staged a study session since last Thursday which halted the passenger ferry Princess of Vancouver and the company's two truck and rail ferries.

However, they allowed the Princess Patricia to make its scheduled run to Alaska out of courtesy for passengers who had booked the trip months in advance.

Guild spokesman Leo Gray said the officers' negotiating committee reluctantly decided to expand the work stoppage to include the Alaska cruise ship to put more pressure on the employer.

The ship is scheduled to arrive in Vancouver Friday morning and was to sail for Alaska Friday night.

The Patricia has 18, eight-day cruises to Alaska scheduled between May 15 and Oct. 6.

The officers also gave the B.C. Federation of Labor the necessary 72-hour notice of possible picketing, complying with federation policy to prepare other unions that could be affected.

But Gray said the guild will not picket unless CP Rail attempts to use other means of shipping freight to Vancouver Island. Such picketing could shut down CP's portion of the Vancouver waterfront, stopping work by longshoremen and railway, office and coastal airline employees.

If the employer tries to use the government-run B.C. Ferries to move freight, as it was allowed to do during the recent strike by CP Rail deckhands, guild pickets would go up at ferry terminals, Gray warned.

Guild representatives will meet with federation officials Thursday, the day before any picketing could take place under federation policy, he said.

The officers are seeking to narrow the pay gap between them and licensed personnel on coastal towboats. Their last contract expired Jan. 31.

March debit blotter busier than 1979's

The value of cheques and other payments processed through Victoria area banks in March was $4,984.2 million, up from $4,721.1 million in the same month last year.

It was also up from $4,896 million in February.

The figures, provided by the Canadian Bankers Association, include all cheques cashed except those drawn on the Bank of Canada, the federal government or by the banks themselves.

Ryan, star without a role now on slippery stage

By DOMINIQUE CLIFT

MONTREAL (CP) — The day after his referendum victory, Quebec Liberal Leader Claude Ryan finds himself in the dangerous position of having no official role to play in the forthcoming constitutional talks.

To make good on the gains he scored Tuesday, he needs an election that will put him in power and make him the spokesman for the majority that voted for renewed federalism. However, this contest may be more difficult than the referendum itself.

While the yes option garnered about the same percentage of votes than the Parti Quebecois received in the 1976 election, the government can rely on a powerful coalition of interests in the mainstream of Quebec society.

The basic ingredient which cements PQ supporters together is nationalism. This sentiment has consistently rallied about one-third of French-speaking voters.

However, the principal elements of the political coalition put together by Premier Rene Levesque and his party include professionals and intellectuals, provincial civil servants and the labor movement.

These are the people who have gained the most from the rapid expansion of provincial power over the last 20 years, in terms of income and of occupational status.

They see themselves as engaged in a mission of nation-building and they are eager to impose on Quebec a much greater degree of homogeneity than it has ever known in the past.

In its rise to power, the PQ managed to break up the former ruling coalition of interests and to make its components increasingly marginal in the mainstream of French-speaking society.

There has been a steady drop in the influence of large Canadian corporations which happen to be overwhelmingly English and of small and medium sized businesses which are mainly French. These two groups are now on the outside looking in, and they constitute the most determined opponents of the PQ.

A number of others, who feel victimized by the changes that have been taking place in Quebec, have also rallied around Ryan and his provincial Liberal party. Each group has its own particular grievances.

It is the diversity of all these group interests that makes it extremely difficult to work out a political program effective enough to undercut the PQ and bring to power a new coalition that could rule effectively.

Non-unionized workers, who constitute the bulk of the lower income groups and of the poorly educated segment of society, have been a prominent element of the no side of the referendum. They have been largely ignored by organized labor and feel resentful of the low status they occupy on the social scale.

The elderly constitute another group who feel resentful of the rise of Big Government and Big Labor in Quebec.

They believe that their own financial insecurity stems from the inflationary pressures fuelled by bureaucratic spending and the favorable wage settlements associated with collective bargaining.

The English and the ethnic groups are also solidly in the Liberal ranks because of their exclusion from Quebec life by nationalist elements and by restrictive PQ policies.

However, all these groups that feel themselves becoming increasingly marginal do not possess any common interests which would spontaneously weld them into a powerful political force. No one has yet put together a program that would unify them beyond the referendum vote.

Claude Ryan himself has concentrated all his energies so far on formulating his constitutional platform and has had little time to approach the broad social and economic issues on which the next provincial election campaign could be waged.

Therefore, he is somewhat at a disadvantage as he enters the post-referendum period. He must somehow cope with the polls showing that almost two-thirds of Quebec voters are fairly well satisfied with the general performance of the Levesque government.

In other words, what Ryan must do is to associate federalism with a social and economic program that will satisfy the majority of voters who apparently reject sovereignty-association but still support the PQ.

Otherwise he runs the risk of allowing the Trudeau-Levesque polarization to dominate the political life of Quebec and to paralyse all attempts at reshaping the Canadian constitution in a way that it will work for all.

We'll pay: west separatist

A spokesman for a group which promotes western separatism said the strong "no" vote against sovereignty-association in Quebec is a victory for the money and power of the central Canadian establishment.

Victoria lawyer Doug Christie said the win for federalism is not a setback for his Western National Association.

"They (the establishment) have managed to buy off the voters of Quebec," he said. "But it's not significant for us because there is no way the people of Central Canada could buy off the people of the west. We have more than they have to offer us."

Christie said the west will have to pay the price as Quebec will be offered more power and benefits to keep it in Confederation.

Premier Bill Bennett says the rejection of sovereignty-association by Quebec voters does not resolve all of Canada's problems.

"The Canadian problem will be the ability of 10 provincial governments and the government of Canada to sit down and resolve not only those concerns that led Quebec to the referendum vote, but also the concerns of the other parts of the country that have been so eloquently expressed by their premiers on their behalf," he said.

Bennett called for an early first-ministers' meeting but said no decisions will be reached easily.

NDP leader Dave Barrett said while the voters of Quebec have rejected Premier Rene Levesque's referendum, they are a long way from rejecting Levesque himself.

"I wouldn't be a bit surprised to see Levesque re-elected," Barrett added.

Barrett said he still stands by a statement he has made before — Levesque might turn out to be one of the greatest Canadians ever.

"He has forced us into a debate that many of us have refused to contemplate for a long time in this country."

He also cautioned against any rush to the bargaining table to begin the drafting of a new Canadian constitution:

"There is an urgency about getting it done but the urgency should be tempered with a wide spectrum of democratic participation."

Jean Riou, director-general of the Federation des Franco-Colombiens, the group representing B.C.'s 45,000 francophones, said the strong "yes" vote means that if the federal government does not make constitutional changes, a future referendum could easily go the other way, he said.

Liberal Senator Ray Perrault said he did not interpret the "no" vote as a mandate to maintain the status quo.

The referendum result, Perrault added, will be a sharp setback for the "narrow-minded, strident western separatists," and for those who have been trying to whip up anti-Quebec sentiment by saying, "if they want to go, let them go."

'Renewed federalism' — or

The Canadian Press

Federal politicians and provincial premiers agreed today that even though voters rejected Quebec Premier Rene Levesque's request for a mandate to negotiate sovereignty-association, there must be swift changes in the present division of powers between the provinces and the federal government.

Opposition Leader Joe Clark, echoing the words of several provincial premiers, said the yes forces might win a second referendum in two years if the provinces are not given more power.

Ed Broadbent, leader of the New Democratic Party, called for a constitutional conference this summer and said Prime Minister Trudeau must be prepared to hand over some powers — he named control over communications and language rights.

The conference should include Trudeau and the provincial premiers, as well as federal and provincial opposition leaders, Broadbent said.

There was unanimous agreement from politicians across the country that Canadians in every province are dissatisfied with the status quo.

And the catchwords "renewed federalism" were the words on everyone's lips, although no one could define the term. Francis Fox, federal communications minister, said in Montreal "it will be up to the prime minister to define it."

But Dick Collver, leader of the Unionist party in Saskatchewan, which seeks political affiliation with the United States, disagreed. He said there would be a great deal of concern in Western Canada "because of the things that have been promised to the 'no' side."

And Manitoba Premier Sterling Lyon warned in Winnipeg Quebec should not expect any special favors from its partners in Confederation when constitutional talks resume.

Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed made it clear he is mainly interested in negotiating a new constitution.

Lougheed told a news conference that he is prepared to go to any constitutional conference but first the federal government must show it intends to respect "the spirit and intent of the constitution as we now have it."

Lougheed said this means Ottawa must show respect for provincial rights of resource ownership and "a commitment to move away from the status quo position of February, 1979," when the last constitutional conference was held.

New Brunswick Premier Richard Hatfield said it was time for politicians to "stop using words that are overused and have no meaning, like special status, sovereignty-association and renewed federalism."

He said Quebec voters told politicians to go to the bargaining table and not come back until they have hammered out a new constitution and created a better country.

In Toronto, Ontario Premier William Davis voiced the feelings of many premiers when he said he would meet "anytime, anywhere to rebuild, renew and strengthen our Canadian constitution."

Promising to co-operate with the federal government, Davis told a Toronto news conference: "This victory does not mark the end of a problem but the beginning of a solution."

Hall jolted

BERLIN (AP) — Two unexplained explosions ripped through a 1,200-seat hall in West Berlin where a convention of West German businessmen was under way today, seriously injuring at least three people and causing extensive damage, police said.

'No' vote may lure investors back to Quebec

By CAROL GOAR
FP News Service

OTTAWA — Last night's historic decision by Quebec voters to stick with Canada may, at last, provide the stability needed to convince investors that the province is a safe, forward-looking place in which to build and to spend.

Nothing would do more to help Quebec's investment-starved economy.

But it may be too soon for rejoicing. The federalist margin was not as decisive as many business leaders had hoped, and might still not be enough to counter the province's image as a risky, volatile piece of real estate.

It is, however, a substantial start.

And Quebec, the largest province in the federation, is blessed with an astounding array of natural resources, but blighted by years of political uncertainty and haphazard economic management.

In the last 10 years, many investors, frightened by headlines about separation, have virtually cut off the flow of funds into the province. This has condemned many factories and businesses to deteriorate and has sentenced several of Quebec's key industries to fall behind their foreign competitors.

'There's been an awful lot of scare talk lately," said Carl Beigie, president of Montreal's C.D. Howe Research Institute. Like other respected economists, he is urging that the referendum be used as a jumping off point for a new era of building.

It is early for such questions. This morning, investors across the country — and in many foreign capitals — could do little more than heave grateful sighs of relief.

Relying on a spate of pre-referendum polls, they had gambled heavily in recent weeks that the federalist forces would come out ahead. Some invested huge amounts in Canadian dollars and shares of Quebec-based companies. If the Parti Quebecois had won last night's plebiscite, it would have cost them millions.

But their faith was rewarded. The dollar emerged strong and the stock market barely faltered under Quebec's political testing.

Now the bigger, longer-term issues beg to be tackled.

Many factories, particularly in the province's important textile and paper industries, have fallen into a sad state of disrepair.

"Nobody wanted to lay out the cash to build new facilities when they figured the province might separate or the industry might collapse out from under them," said Peter Gusen, director of regional forecasting for the Ottawa-based Conference Board.

The province's traditional reliance on foreign investment has exacerbated the problem: "Many foreign investors who aren't familiar with Canadian politics, see separatism as some kind of revolution like they have in Latin American countries," Gusen said. "They figure their property might be confiscated."

A second major weakness in the Quebec economy is that several key industries — textiles, furniture and footwear — are too weak to face world competition.

At the moment, the only thing keeping them alive is a program set up by the federal government three years ago to limit the flow of better-priced imports into the country.

Beigie offered this bleak outlook for Quebec's so-called soft industries. "There are dozens of little 'Ma and Pa Clothing (or Furniture or Leather) Companies' in Quebec, which are going to be gobbled just like corner grocery stores are gobbled up by supermarkets."

Economists have documented a number of other trouble spots in the Quebec economy.

— The city of Montreal, which has been sliding downhill the Second World War, now faces the prospect of being reduced to the role of a mere regional distribution centre. Fernand Martin, a Quebec economist who has specialized in charting the city's evolution, says there may still be time for Montreal to establish itself as an international culture centre, but the city must act fast.

— The Quebec government — like its federal counterpart — has fallen into the costly habit of spending more than it takes in, resulting in a large provincial deficit. Taxpayers and investors are becoming increasingly uneasy about the tax burden they will soon have to bear.

In spite of these blemishes, there is little doubt that the province has an enviable economic base on which to build.

— Although it has almost no oil, it has a virtually limitless supply of cheap hydro-electric power.

— It has one of the richest iron ore deposits in the world. Although the mines may face a difficult few years as a result of the recent downturn in U.S. steel production, their long-term outlook is good.

— Two centres of industrial strength are the province's modern aircraft and communications industries.

The constitutional debate has been — and is — of monumental importance. But the struggle to re-order the economic future of the province will be every bit as pressing.

Nixon praised

LONDON (AP) — Richard Nixon "above all thought in terms of a world strategy for the United States," former Prime Minister Edward Heath said. His remarks were in a review of Nixon's book, The Real War, published in The Times newspaper.

Disappointed Montreal protestor tears down Canadian flag

Quebec police attack marchers as 'oui' demonstration dies down

By JOHN GODDARD

MONTREAL (CP) — Dozens of helmeted police with billy clubs emerged from the shadows of parkland on Mount Royal early today, clubbing and pushing demonstrators disappointed with the federalist victory in the referendum.

The three-hour march — marked by sporadic violence at its height — was dwindling in numbers and slowing its initially brisk pace when the riot police moved in, backed up by motorcycle riders and squad cars.

Dozens of people were clubbed and pushed along with night sticks as rows of riot squad members moved in a line down the hill, quickly breaking up the crowd of about 1,000 persons.

One television cameraman was pushed to the ground and kicked by three policeman.

Another policeman pushed a young man head-over-heels into a grassy ravine, where two other policemen kicked him while he lay on the ground.

This reporter was grabbed by police, had his shirt torn and was clubbed in the back as he tried to get a look at the scene in the ravine.

Witnesses said several persons were taken to hospital but details of injuries were not immediately available.

After a tiring, noisy 10-kilometre parade along downtown streets and up through the posh suburb of Westmount, the crowd started a final push to the park overlooking the city on Mount Royal. Near the park the crowd's numbers had dwindled to less than one third of its original strength.

During the march, stone-throwing demonstrators broke store and apartment windows and roughed up one CBC television technician.

On Mount Royal there was talk at the front of the parade about lighting a bonfire on top of the hill when the shadowy silhouettes of riot police were first seen on a ridge.

Leaders pleaded with the first row of a dozen policemen that they wanted to keep the march peaceful.

But swarms of helmeted officers quickly appeared, using their billy clubs to jab and sometimes beat those who were not moving as quickly asthey wished.

Rocks were thrown and windows smashed as the parade spontaneously wound its way through predominantly-English Westmount, with other demonstrators chanting an appeal for non-violence.

Quebec provincial police said the rest of the city and province was mostly quiet with the exception of an unidentified man being "badly injured" in front of a no-committee office in Montreal's east end.

Windows with federalist posters were the marchers' initial targets after the mostly-young, French-speaking throng gathered from two or three spots east of downtown.

Windows of a no-committee office were smashed with rocks. Another office window was broken and a Quebec flag stolen.

Momentary panic set in when a car backfired, prompting one radio station to report that gun shots had been fired.

But perpetrators of the vandalism appeared to be few with others rushing in to stop the trouble.

As marchers wound their way uphill through more affluent housing chanting anti-Trudeau slogans and "On veut un pays" (We want a country), a car was stoned and at least two of its windows smashed.

The driver pulled away at top speed, narrowly missing dozens of marchers but it was impossible to tell if any of his several passengers were hurt.

There was some talk of marching on a house Prime Minister Trudeau bought when he prematurely announced his retirement last fall, even though he is not due to take possession of house for two years.

That plan was abandoned. The crowd headed for the University of Montreal with their numbers and energy ebbing. Then the crowd turned around, moving towards Mount Royal where they were confronted by police.

The area was cleared by 2:15 a.m. EDT.

TV turns crucial vote into muffled yawn

By INA WARREN

MONTREAL (CP) — A referendum is supposed to be an expression of the people's choice.

But ordinary people and their thoughts didn't get much air-time during television coverage of referendum night Tuesday, the culmination of what has been a wearying battle for the hearts and minds of 4.3 million Quebecers.

The television networks used formats similar to those used for elections to present the first-ever live coverage of a Canadian plebiscite. To tell the unfolding story to Canadians, they relied mainly on their armies of anchormen, reporters, and invited experts.

And what they delivered — Quebec's English and French media, maligned at times by both federal and provincial politicians — was a crisply professional, non-partisan package.

Surprisingly, it made for four hours of rather dull television fare.

Coverage began at 7 p.m. EDT on most networks, but the only slice of really gripping television came 2½ hours later. That's when a tired, pasty-faced Premier Rene Levesque faced 6,000 fervent, flag-waving Oui supporters at the Paul Sauve arena who gave him a 10-minute ovation.

The scene was truly affecting, with a choked-up Levesque telling his weeping supporters that they'd all meet again next time.

If emotion makes for good television, so does confrontation. The CTV network had the foresight to invite fiery union leader Louis Laberge, president of the Quebec Federation of Labor, and Brian Mulroney, president of Iron Ore Canada, to join its panel of experts.

The two men have openly been trading insults in the press in recent weeks, with Laberge accusing Iron Ore of belonging to the club of multinationals that backed a no vote, and Tuesday's televison lights seemed to heat up the feud.

At one point, the stocky gray-haired Laberge accused Mulroney of taking advantage of his position at Iron Ore to "lie on TV" about the referendum.

Mulroney retorted loudly: "If he wants me to play the buffoon, I'll put my rubber boots on and get down in a ditch with him."

CTV was significantly later than both the CBC and Radio-Canada, its French-language service, in declaring a decisive victory for the no side.

But then such announcements, coming as they did just before 8 p.m., could be construed as a bit of a spoiler in what was to be a neck-and-neck horse race with no election-style computer to predict the result before the polls closed.

These days diamonds are investor's best friend

By DEREK SIDENIUS

A dwindling faith in paper money and fear the federal government will impose tough currency controls are driving more and more Canadians to put some of their savings in investment diamonds.

According to John Jacox, manager of the Victoria branch of Diamonds International Ltd. demand the gems has mushroomed in recent years.

The company's sales over the past four years reveals just how attractive they have become.

In 1976, the first year the company founded in Calgary by oil magnate Jim Brown went into business, it had sales of $80,000.

The other is Western Diamond House Ltd. operated by long-time Victoria resident John Freedthy.

Neither Freedthy nor Jacox would talk about the volume of sales they are putting through in Victoria but both conceded they expect a 40- to 50-per cent increase in orders this year over last.

Jacox says nothing quite matches the potential and security of investment diamonds.

The gems have steadily gone up in value over the past 42 years. Between 1967 and 1978 the growth rate was 353 per cent.

Investment diamonds differ from jewelry diamonds in that they are far rarer, making up only a tiny fraction of all diamonds produced.

They include the top seven of the 23 grades of color and top six of the 11 grades of clarity, the two major factors that determine a diamond's value.

Currently a D-flawless, the most perfect naturally occurring diamond, brings $86,600 U.S. a carat. Even the lowest quality investment stone, J-slightly included #1, costs $5,300 U.S. a carat.

Jacox says it has reached the point major investment houses are now considering orders for half-carat diamonds.

If the demand continues — and there is every indication it will — quarter-carat orders will be next.

By leaving the diamonds in U.S. banks, the buyers don't have to pay Canadian excise and sales taxes which add 19 per cent to the price. And if the buyers should decide to resell them they have a far larger potential market to draw from.

Jacox says one of the reasons for the diamond-investing trend is a growing distrust in paper money.

There is also a fear the government will introduce currency controls limiting the amount of money Canadians can take out of the country.

He suggests no more than 20 to 25 per cent of savings should be put into the gems.

In addition, purchasers should make sure their diamonds have been certified by the Gemnology Institute of America. That adds five to six per cent to the cost but it is well worth it, he says. Not only does it guarantee the value of the diamond but the certificate is recognized anywhere in the world. It's like a pedigree.

There are other precautions, too.

Diamonds are regarded in B.C. as just another commodity and commodity dealers do not have to be registered with the superintendent of brokers.

That may change. The securities commission is currently drafting legislation that could be introduced before the year is out.

Until then, the lack of legislative control means there is always a risk to investors of getting stung, a spokesman for the RCMP commercial crime section in Victoria says.

Seattle traffic down

The Victoria Princess ferry and the Flying Princess jetfoil carried a total of 1,782 passengers from Seattle to Victoria over the three-day holiday weekend, according to NDP sources.

NDP critics say it represents a loss to the local tourist economy of about $100,000 just for the one weekend,.

The managing director of the Crown-owned B.C. Steamship Co., Bob Wright, was unable to confirm the NDP's traffic figures and would not comment on them.

Official statistics probably will not be ready until next week, he said.

"I'm more interested in what we do in the future than what we did last weekend," Wright added.

"I'm sure the minister of tourism will use evry possible excuse — that the Americans staged an eruption, that the weather was bad — but we're convinced it's the change of vessel," said Bob Skelly (NDP-Alberni).

"The Marguerite had a nostalgic attraction for tourists."

CRD ruled liable if Saanich wins Tillicum battle

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

Saanich may be able to claim $46,200 damages from the Capital Region District for every month construction of the Tillicum shopping centre is delayed, Mayor Mel Couvelier said Tuesday.

Couvelier was commenting on the latest round in the three-week-old court battle over the $30 million development.

He told aldermen B.C. Supreme Court Justice Mr. A.A. Mackoff ruled in Vancouver earlier Tuesday that Saanich can claim damages if it wins the case.

Damages were calculated by municipal staff based on loss of interest, business tax and property taxes, Couvelier explained.

If damages were claimed, they would be calculated from May 9 — the date Saanich could have issued building permits to Cal Investments.

Granting Saanich the right to damages, if it is successful, was one of several decisions MacKoff made Tuesday.

Mackoff also granted Saanich an injunction preventing the CRD from passing a bylaw limiting the size of regional shopping centres to 295,000 square feet.

And Cal Investments has launched an independent action seeking a declaration that the CRD bylaw is illegal on the grounds of discrimination.

Cal Investments claims the bylaw is discriminatory.

Saanich municipal solicitor Chris Nation said today there is a strong possibility Cal Investments will join its action to the court case now proceeding in Vancouver.

The judge denied an application by Cal for damages from the regional district.

Meanwhile, CRD directors planned an emergency meeting today to discuss the latest court developments in the three-week-old case but later cancelled it.

The original injunction preventing Saanich from lifting a restrictive covenant limiting the size of the centre to 295,000 square feet will stand, the judge ruled.

But Mackoff said Saanich can issue building permits to the company for the 295,000-square-foot development.

However, Cal lawyer Brian Wallace has said in court his company will not proceed with the smaller development.

Cal wants to expand the centre to 495,000 square feet to include an Eatons store.

The regional district was granted an injunction preventing the expansion.

Board chairman James Campbell said Saanich's move to lift the covenant is a breach of faith.

Mishap kills woman

A 20-year-old Saanichton woman was killed Tuesday night in a single-vehicle accident on Highway 97, about 40 kilometres north of Williams Lake.

Volcano roadblocks strand Victoria pair

A group of Victoria rockhounds who spent two nights at a ranger station about 100 miles northeast of smoking Mount St. Helens returned home last night, leaving two members behind — stranded but safe.

Victoria Lapidary Society president Claude Rawlings and his wife are on Saddle Mountain in Washington state waiting for roads to clear so they can come home, Catherine Dyer told the Times today.

Mrs. Dyer and her husband Glenn returned to their home at 1580 Beach Dr. shortly after 11 p.m. Tuesday.

She said 16 members of the lapidary group were stuck in the tiny hamlet of Vantage, Wash., waiting for a heavy cloud of volcanic ash to clear.

Vantage was directly in the path of a black cloud of ash blowing eastward, according to Mrs. Dyer, who said darkness and several inches of ash on the road made it impossible to drive.

The group left Ellensburg, Wash., about 9:30 a.m. Sunday, travelling east to meet the Rawlings on Saddle Mountain for a rock hunting expedition.

It had no idea Mount St. Helens had exploded, spewing tons of hot mud, gases and volcanic ash.

"It started getting darker and darker and there was thunder and lightning," Mrs. Dyer said.

They were told what happed when they reached Vantage.

"By the time we got to Vantage we could begin to feel ash falling. It was pitch black, darker than night. We couldn't see anything.

"Vantage was a disaster area. People were sleeping in cars," said Mrs. Dyer.

Only one phone call was allowed, making it impossible for people to personally contact their worried families.

Dawn Rawlings, 17, said her parents called her Monday night and said they have no idea when they will be allowed to leave the area.

Three inches of volcanic ash covers the Saddle Mountain area and state police are moving people out in small convoys, Dawn said.

Meanwhile, a bus load of 43 Ellensburg high school students stranded in Victoria since Sunday left Victoria today for the trip home.

The Ellensburg musical group was performing at University of Victoria over the weekend when the mountain exploded and all roads in the area closed.

"We want to be sure when we start out with this busload of kids we get home safely," Ellensburg teacher Betty Burnett said Tuesday.

UVic extended the school's credit to allow them to sleep and eat on campus until the end of the crisis.

Law students again tackle police duties

Four University of Victoria law students will spend the summer working as cadets with the Victoria police department in the 10th year of a program initiated by retired chief John Gregory.

They are first-year students Linda Tarras, Paul Grier and Gregory Harney, and second-year student Andrew Petter. They will perform all duties of a police recruit.

The program began in 1970 and was the first of its kind in Canada. More than 35 police departments have followed suit.

No honor as thieves end up in same boat

There's no honor among thieves.

To prove the point city police have five persons in custody, one for theft of a fishing boat and four others for breaking into the same boat and stealing equipment and supplies.

Police are taking special pleasure in the catch because it all started with a report of a minor break-in at Capital City Marine Fuels, 124 Kingston, Tuesday morning.

Nothing much was taken — some change, cigarettes and gum — and at first police suspected juveniles.

But then the owner, Ronald Davis, said he had been having difficulty with a customer, a Campbell River man who was living on a boat somewhere in the area.

Officers checked the wharfs but couldn't find the man or boat. So they contacted Campbell River RCMP to see if they could help.

They indicated they were looking for the same person in connection with the theft of a 20-foot fishing boat on April 28.

Shortly after 9 p.m. two patrol officers spotted a boat moored to a dock under the Johnson Street bridge.

They went aboard and found the suspect.

The boat had recently been painted over but the registration number confirmed it was the same vessel stolen from Campbell River.

They took the man into custody and locked up the vessel.

That would normally have been the end of the matter but at 4:35 a.m. today two officers stopped two men in a car on a downtown street for a routine check and found a sleeping bag and marine gear stuffed in the back seat.

That aroused the officers' suspicions and so they brought the pair to the station for questioning.

As they were entering, the two officers who had arrested the man on the boat recognized the marine gear as coming from the stolen boat.

They subsequently discovered the boat had been broken into.

Further investigation led to the arrest of another man and a woman.

All five were to appear in provincial court today.

Pressure for more sidewalks

North Saanich council is being pressured to build more sidewalks in the largely rural municipality.

A delegation of 50 residents, lead by former mayor Paul Grieve, Tuesday night urged construction of sidewalks on portions of Birch, Downy and West Saanich roads.

The group expressed concern about the safety of pedestrians, particularly children, and cited the deaths of Carolyn Stansal and her infant son, Benjamin, who were crushed by a truck while walking near their home on Birch Road last Oct. 15.

Council agreed to look into the request but deferred a decision until the next meeting of council in two weeks.

Only a handful of roads in the municipality have pedestrian paths.

'Absolutely deplorable,' Pollen brands centre plan

By NORMAN GIDNEY

"It's absolutely deplorable. Why more people aren't enraged, I don't know," he told about 60 people at the James Bay Community School.

He illustrated his speech with a slide show that jumped from the Inner Harbor to Dallas Road to the west end of Vancouver, New York and Scandinavia, demonstrating his arguments for leaving the harbor edge as open green space.

Referring to recent remarks by Premier Bill Bennett and city Ald. Bob Wright that there are only two types of people — builders and knockers — Pollen flashed a slide of smoggy, crowded Manhattan on the screen.

"This is what the builders did," he said, "three murders a day."

He showed a slide of the proposed three-tower hotel which developer Sandy Reid wanted to erect on the waterfront site of the convention centre back in the early 1970s.

"The knockers built Laurel Point park. The knockers built the lower causeway," he said.

Then he showed slides of Turku and Tapiola in Finland as well as Stockholm where developments — sometimes high-rise apartments — have been located in the midst of green space.

In Turku, no one may build within 100 yards of the water, Pollen said.

He also tore into developer Sam Bawlf's $5 million luxury condominium development on the waterfront, immediately north of the convention centre site at Wharf and Fort.

"Bawlf is now building a monster that makes the convention centre look like a work of art," Pollen said.

The small gathering, held just before a public hearing by city council tonight on the convention centre, attracted a mixed gathering of neighborhood activists and politicians as well as a minority of convention centre boosters.

Donna Thomas, 1214-345 Quebec, said jobs for young Victorians aren't going to happen without some kind of development like the centre.

She said she has travelled to other cities where the convention centres are right on the water and they are used as much by local residents as visiting businessmen.

Aldermen Bill McElroy and John Cooper came to the meeting. Defeated mayoral candidate Murray Glazier came out against the convention centre, as did former Esquimalt MLA Jim Gorst.

The aldermen were silent except when McElroy questioned Pollen's challenge to city council to hold a referendum on the whole controversy.

McElroy said a referendum can only be held at the next municipal election in 1981; Pollen replied that with the provincial cabinet's permission the restriction could be waived.

Tour bus operator Gorst said he's been working since 1965 to preserve the harbor and Gorge waterway.

Baseball negotiators near deadline

Times News Services

With the strike countdown reduced to hours instead of weeks or days, mediator Kenneth Moffett hoped negotiators in the baseball contract dispute would return to the bargaining table today prepared to work out an agreement.

"What is needed is a change in philosophies, by one side or the other," Moffett said Sunday when he ordered a two-day recess in the talks.

Moffett said the climate of the negotiations had become highly charged and it was his feeling the two sides needed some time away from each other.

Marvin Miller, executive director of the players association, and Ray Grebey, chief negotiator for management, spent Monday and Tuesday in almost constant communication with their constituencies. Miller discussed strike logistics with the players while Grebey conferred with owners, updating them on the situation.

Still on the table were proposals covering a broad range of topics in the basic agreement such as pensions, minimum salaries, salary arbitration, scheduling, and expenses. Agreement seemed attainable on most of those subjects last week, but the talks broke down with the two sides remaining far apart on the major issue of compensation for free agents.

The compensation question involves the demand of owners that replacement players be made available from the rosters of teams signing premium free agents. The players feel that such a system would restrict their movement and eventually eliminate the free agent system.

While the collective bargaining agreement does not include player salaries, which are negotiated by the players individually, Miller and his union say the compensation clause sought by management is basically a money issue.

"The compensation question has been blown up in the wrong direction," Miller said. "What the owners are trying to do is drive down salaries.

"It's like three-card monte, your eye follows the wrong card."

Miller offered an example.

"They don't have to worry about players coming along, saying, 'I'm as good as Rod Carew, I want as much as he makes.' What they worry about is the large group of players who are not the top-paid superstars.

"These players are more numerous. The savings there would be far more substantial. That's why, in their last compensation proposal, their definition of premium players included 50 per cent of all players.

"I'm not saying there is no relationship between the top and the middle, but the middle is where the real money is, and that's what they're after."

The owners have insisted all along that the season need not be interrupted and that negotiations could continue with no concern for the strike deadline of midnight Thursday. But the players association says open-ended negotiations would not serve the union's best interests and has refused to stop the clock.

Meanwhile, on the playing field Tuesday, Steve Garvey continued his long-ball rampage in the National League with a three-run homer that helped Los Angeles Dodgers beat St. Louis Cardinals 4-3, San Francisco Giants blanked Chicago Cubs 2-0, Cincinnati Reds nipped Philadelphia Phillies 7-6, Houston Astros defeated New York Mets 3-2 and Atlanta Braves turned back Montreal Expos, 1-0.

In the American League, Boston Red Sox edged Toronto Blue Jays 4-3, Cleveland Indians beat Baltimore 4-0 then lost 8-0 to the Orioles in a doubleheader, Detroit Tigers slammed New York Yankees 12-8, Chicago White Sox defeated Minnesota Twins 4-2, Kansas City Royals shut out Oakland A's 1-0, California Angels slipped past Texas Rangers 5-4 and Milwaukee Brewers bombed Seattle Mariners, 14-5.

Road to top wasn't easy for Thompson

LONDON (AP) — A brash 21-year-old Briton, Daley Thompson, has succeeded 1976 Olympic champion Bruce Jenner as the world's greatest athlete.

Thompson gained the title, usually accorded to the Olympic titleholder in the decathlon or the world record holder in the gruelling 10-event competition, during the weekend in the Austrian village of Goetzis.

He had gone there intent only on making an Olympic qualifying score in the strength-sapping competition.

Instead, the youngster from London's tough Notting Hill Gate area emerged with the tag which Jenner had gained four years ago by winning the Olympic gold medal at Montreal with a world record of 8,618 points.

Thompson, the Commonwealth champion and athletic hero of Britain's large immigrant population, surpassed Jenner's record by four points with a total of 8,622. It was a performance that underlined the words of his coach Bruce Longden, who has said: "The competition at the Moscow Olympics will be for second and third place."

However, the road to the top has not been easy for the likeable Thompson, son of a Nigerian father and a Scottish mother.

He had a difficult childhood. His father is dead and he sees little of his mother.

But Thompson has good looks, wit, intelligence and tremendous athletic prowess. It was those qualities that helped him from the tumbledown suburb of Notting Hill to the brink of Olympic glory.

Already a television celebrity in Britain, Thompson has found himself overtaken by his image — and recently spent several months training in San Diego, where he is rather less than a household name and the climate is more conducive to concentrated training.

"I don't mind playing up to the Muhammad Ali image sometimes," he admits. "But all this publicity is taking up an increasing part of my life.

"But I can handle it because I saw it coming. I've been preparing and waiting for success for years."

Three months of training in San Diego helped Thompson peak for his world record, but he previously turned down more than 20 offers of full scholarships from U.S. colleges and does most of his training near his current base, the quiet country town of Crawley in Sussex.

He says he dislikes the hypocrisy of pretending to be a student while being, in effect, a full-time athlete.

"I don't like all the razzmatazz that America has to offer, I prefer to struggle on in England," he said.

Thompson now will be under the pressure of being expected to win an Olympic gold, but he never has been short of confidence.

Indeed, Thompson, who hopes to grab golds in the 1980 Games at Moscow and in 1984 at Los Angeles, already has plans for cashing in on his talent when the time is right.

The example of Jenner, now a millionaire, is not lost on him.

"Ideally, I would like to go into sports commentating and television commercials, anything close to sport, so long as there is money, preferably quite a bit of money, in it," he once said with a smile.

Experience tells after rough start as Wales trims good B.C. squad

By BILL WALKER

Rugby, international style, returned to Victoria Tuesday night and, if the result may have been predictable, the pace and the intensity of the match certainly wasn't.

The Wales "B" team, featuring five internationals in its starting lineup, prevailed 23-7 over a scrappy British Columbia rep side and the difference perhaps could be simply explained.

The players perform at different levels of competition through the season and it told in Wales' favor, especially in crucial instances.

Wales had too much experience for the B.C. reps with a defence that stiffened noticeably inside the 22-metre line.

Otherwise, B.C. had its chances, and good ones; showed mobility amongst the forwards, speed in the backfield and played Wales even in another facet of the game — roughness.

This wasn't any panty-waist affair and it was soon evident.

It is said that a part of Welsh rugby history is that they come to play, on their terms, the opposition's, or by mutual consent.

Last year the Welsh were severely criticized for rough play in the United States and a walk-off by Pontypool in a match against California Golden Poppies.

Be that as it may, this match was less than 12 minutes old when lock Chris Fowler of B.C. was forced out with a bad gash on the forehead suffered in a scrum.

So the rules were set early, as all could plainly see and, after a few preliminary exchanges, a near free-for-all was precipitated with about six players mainly involved.

Referee Keith Morrison decided then that enough was enough and ejected two players, prop Ron McInnis of B.C and 8th man, international Eddie Butler of Wales.

With tempers cooled, play proceeded and it was Wales which dominated the first half with the B.C. coming on strongly in the second 40 minutes in a match that was marked by several fine three-quarter movements that drew appreciative response from the crowd of about 1,100.

Outside centre Steve Fenwick of Bridgend, the Welsh captain, turned in a fine display, particularly running against the flow, and scored nine points on a try, penalty goal and a conversion.

After fullback Graham Taylor of B.C. had missed a chance to put B.C. ahead with a penalty goal early in the match, Rhodri Lewis of Maesteg opened the scoring for Wales near the flag on a play set up by Fenwick.

B.C. was called for an offside minutes later inside the 22-metre line and Fenwick kicked the penalty for a 7-0 Welsh lead and at about the 30-minute mark Rihard Moriarty, a tower of a man, fell on a loose ball over the line for a second try for the tourists.

It was a tough break for B.C., but not totally undeserved as, on the Welsh drive that immediately preceded the play, Fenwick had the ball knocked out of his hands right on the line.

Fenwick converted and Wales led 13-0 at the break despite several fine movements by B.C. featuring Andrew Bibby, Graham Taylor, John Billingsley, Robbie Grieg and Ray Rogers.

In the second half, Taylor connected for a penalty goal at five minutes to put B.C. on the board and in the ensuing 10 minutes or so there were some excellent opportunites lost.

Taylor, Spence McTavish and Jim Donaldson were primarily involved in one exciting sortie that was only stopped by the Welsh defence about five yards out and at this stage it was pleasing fast-paced action that kept the crowd happy and demonstrative.

But just as it seemed that B.C. might dent the Welsh armor, Pat Daniels of Cardiff broke through the B.C. defence on a beautiful run from near mid-field to score.

Fenwick then went over at 65 minutes and Geraint Bowen converted to end the Welsh scoring.

But B.C. came fighting back and Uvic's Gary Grant, after a good move by Grieg, picked his way through tacklers, taking two with him to give B.C. its only try at 73 minutes.

Still, it was an excellent effort that may stand several of the B.C. side in good stead as many of them will represent Canada against the Welsh team in a full international at Swangard Stadium, Saturday.

Kickoff is 1 p.m. The game will be televised on CTV, channel 8.

Sports tonight

International field hockey, softball and baseball make up a varied diet for live-action sports fans tonight.

The men's field hockey tussle between Vancouver Island All-Stars and New South Wales of Australia will be played at 6 at Juan de Fuca Recreation Centre.

All of the softball and baseball games are scheduled to start at 6:30.

Seasprays face Victoria Athletics in a Stuffy McGinnis Men's Softball League game at Central Park. In Victoria-Saanich Senior Women's League play, Butler Brothers takes on New York-New York and Bemister's Welding tackles McDonald Furniture at Hyacinth Park. At Heywood Avenue Park, it's Strathcona Hotel vs. Capital Builders in a Heywood Men's League contest. Coast Projects meets James Bay Inn and The Saints play Labatts in Macdonald Men's League action at Macdonald Park. In the Sidney Men's Association, Sidney Hotel faces Prairie Inn in Sanscha Park.

Zimbabwe avoids Lions

SALISBURY (Reuter) — Zimbabwe has cancelled a game here next month involving the touring British Lions rugby team to safeguard the newly-independent country's renewed membership in the Olympic movement and to forge sporting links with the rest of Africa, government sources said today.

The Lions, who maintain firm contacts with South Africa, were to have played Zimbabwe's national team June 10 as part of a southern African tour, arranged before the country, previously known as Rhodesia, gained its independence last month from Britain.

With victory near, Islanders get edgy

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (CP) — They started on Tuesday, April 8, these Stanley Cup playoffs, and they are continuing six weeks later.

There was a time not so long ago that the National Hockey League playoff champions were known by mid-April. The first time the playoffs lasted into May — the first of the month — was 1965, when Montreal Canadians defeated Chicago Black Hawks in a seven-game final.

New York Islanders lead Philadelphia Flyers 3-1 in the current best-of-seven series and, if it goes seven games, it will end May 27, equalling the latest date ever, when Philadelphia defeated Buffalo Sabres in six games in 1975.

The sixth game is set for Philadelphia Thursday.

New York centre Duane Sutter turned wistful in thinking back on how far the team has come since its fifth-place, regular-season finish.

"It's been so long," he said. "It seems like a year ago that we were playing Los Angeles (Kings)."

The Islanders' preliminary round opponent has already become the answer to a trivia question and it's still not certain whose name will be inscribed on the Stanley Cup.

"Maybe it's just me," said Sutter. "I haven't slept.

"I've been so tight after the games. During games in the regular season I got two or three hours of sleep in the afternoon before a game. Before the third game here was the only time I slept before a game. Before the fourth game I tossed and turned."

The length of the season — 80 games — and a potential 26 playoffs stretching into summerlike heat has begun to grate upon the players.

"The sooner it ends, the better — I want to get golfing," said testy Islanders' goaltender Billy Smith, looking ahead to Thursday's game against the Flyers when they can capture their first Stanley Cup. "This has been a tough, long haul for me.

"It's been a lot of pressure. I've been tired. I'm ready to quit hockey. I'm ready to get into summertime."

Left winger Clark Gillies was discussing the Islanders' prospects calmly enough when he turned his attention to the same endurance test.

"We're not going to change our style," he said. "We hope to get in on them as quick as we can and fence them up in their own end."

"Hopefully, we'll get a few breaks and end this goddamn thing because it's been going on for so long now.

"When we first started this thing, we said, 'We've got to get to the finals, we've got to get to the Stanley Cup.' It's been a long, tough road so far. To be one game away is what you've always looked for. To get out there and win it would be the best thing."

Penalty problems once again proved to be Esquimalt Legion's downfall in a Western Canada Major Junior Lacrosse League game Tuesday night at Esquimalt Sports Centre.

Burnaby Cablevision scored four odd-man goals en route to a 13-11 decision over Legion, which trailed by period scores of 3-2 and 9-7.

Esquimalt took 11 minor penalties while Burnaby was nailed for three.

Ed Van Dyke, John Crowther and Terry Jay each scored two for Esquimalt while Kelly Bryant, Russ Kennedy, Jim Lightbody, Brian Bell and Rhys Wickes added single tallies.

Both goaltenders were tough, with Dwight Maetche stopping 49 drives at the Burnaby goal and Derek Croucher turning back 55 for the losers.

The final Burnaby goal came after Croucher had been pulled for an extra attacker late in the game, and followed three Cablevision shots that hit the post.

Burrards break out

VANCOUVER — Vancouver Burrards got four goals and five assists from Erik Otterstrom as they defeated New Westminster Salmonbellies 18-11 in Western Lacrosse Association action Tuesday night.

The win over the first-place Salmonbellies broke a seven-game losing streak for the last-place Burrards.

Top scorer for New Westminster was Wayne Goss with three goals and four assists. Len Ciminelli and Brian Tasker each had two, and Salmonbelly singles were provided by Bob Tasker, Eric Cowieson, Paul Dalmonte and Steve d'Easum.

Jim Poelzer made 41 saves in the Vancouver goal, while Rod Banister stopped 45 shots for New Westminster.

The Burrards picked up 15 minor penalties and two majors. New Westminster accumulated 13 minors and two majors.

Indonesia completes boycott vote by bloc

JAKARTA (AP) — Indonesia has decided not to send its athletes to the Moscow Summer Olympics, the national sports committee said Tuesday night.

The Indonesian public has favored the proposed boycott because of Soviet military action in Afghanistan, an Islamic country. More than 90 per cent of Indonesia's 140 million people are Moslem.

Indonesia is the last country among the five members of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations to announce its decision to boycott the Summer Olympics. The others are Malaysia, Singapore, the Philippines and Thailand.

Bland beaten in Cup tennis

WEST BERLIN (Reuter) — The United States began its defence of the women's Federation Cup of tennis Tuesday with a 3-0 victory over Poland.

Meanwhile Canada made an early exit, losing 2-1 to Yugoslavia.

In singles, Nina Bland of Victoria lost to Renata Sasak 5-7, 6-1, 6-3 and Marjorie Blackwood of Ottawa lost to Mima Jausovec 6-2, 6-2.

Blackwood and Karen Dewis of London, Ont., salvaged a bit of pride by winning the doubles, 3-6, 6-4, 6-4 over Sasak and Jausovec.

Americans Tracy Austin and Kathy Jordan allowed their respective singles opponents — Marzena Sieraka and Ivona Kuczynska — only three games altogether to clinch their place in the second round with a 2-0 lead.

Jordan won 6-0 6-1 and Austin 6-1 6-1.

Australia, the second seeds, dispatched Norway in opening its bid to win the Cup for the eighth time, a feat which would equal the U.S. record.

Wendy Turnbull crushed Ellen Grindvald 6-3 6-2 and Dianne Fromholtz beat Astrid Sunde 6-0 6-1 before combining to take the doubles 6-1 6-2.

Trip into mountains stirs ideas of skiing

by stewart lang

Skiing anyone?

A trip into the mountains north of Cowichan Lake over the long weekend revealed that the snow hasn't yet entirely disappeared from the higher peaks of Vancouver Island.

It prompted a lot of pleasant memories and anticipation for next winter.

Sure, the season is over and it's the time to enjoy all the outdoors has to offer for the summer.

There'll be another chair — this time a 3,300-foot long triple — in operation at Mt. Washington near Courtenay. The new lift, with a capacity of 2,000 skiers per hour and a vertical rise of 710 feet, should eliminate a little of the lineup problem weekend skiers found during the initial part of their inaugural season.

In addition, there will be a few changes in the day lodge to make things a little more comfortable.

Forbidden Plateau, the other Courtenay area, is also planning a busy summer.

By next season, hydro lines should be strung right to the mountain and one of the T-bars will be electrified. This move might help curb the delays caused by mechanical breakdowns and subsequent long lineups on alternate lifts.

A water and sewer system should be in place by next season and expansion of the daylodge facilities will include indoor biffies for the first time.

Operators on Mt. Arrowsmith, near Port Alberni, plan to reconstruct the two alpine area lodges which burned down last season and several new trails will be opened to offer a little more variety in the upper alpine area.

In addition, a consultant has been hired to draw up a new master plan for development, which could conceivably result in abandonment of the lower area where the present daylodge and chair lift are located.

Last season the lower area was able to operate only about one-third of the time the upper level was open.

All of this is part and parcel of the current ski boom in British Columbia.

Along with the current construction on Blackcomb, which is scheduled to open this fall and will combine with Whistler Mountain to form one of the foremost areas in North America, most resort complexes in the province are planning major expansions or have plans on the drawing boards.

Multinational companies, federal and provincial governments as well as the private sector are all busy pouring capital into the industry.

Over the next decade, approximately $400 million will be spent on ski facilties in the province.

This current boom is fuelled in part by the depressed Canadian dollar. The exchange rate makes investment attractive and serves to boost skier traffic from south of the border.

Another factor is the bureaucratic jungle ski area developers have to thread in the United States. Up here, things are a little more straightforward.

Hopefully, for both investors and the skiing public wanting new facilities, the 12 per cent annual growth rate in the number of skiers will continue.

And, while we're on the subject, it might be apropos to take a look from another side at what is often considered to be expensive skiing at Whistler.

"The basic prices, including air fare, are fairly steep, but things like huge steaks, car hire, petrol, accomodation and lift prices are much cheaper than in Europe."

Further along, he writes:

"The service and willingness to please is something else you won't get in Europe. They really do want you to come back — and this applies to everyone from waiters to lift attendants to taxi drivers.

His one disappointment seemed a little obscure.

"Not once, even in the Rockies, did we see a real Mountie in a red tunic. They drive patrol cars in blue uniforms just like over here. Shame!"

Which leaves us wondering just who or what he did see?

Cruyff faces tax probe

MADRID (AP) — Johann Cruyff, former Dutch soccer star now playing for Washington Diplomats of the North American Soccer League, is among a number of persons being investigated for alleged tax fraud in Spain, finance ministry sources reported.

The sources said Cruyff might owe the state $475,000 for unpaid taxes during 1978, the year when he stopped playing for Barcelona.

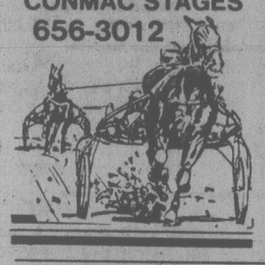

In addition to being the best paid player in the world at the time, Cruyff was engaged in business activities in Spain. The sources said several years would elapse before the investigation is completed.

Wilkens gets three-year pact

SEATTLE (AP) — Lenny Wilkens will coach Seattle SuperSonics for at least three more seasons.

Wilkens, 42, asked for and was granted a two-year extension of his current contract, giving him a pact through the 1984-85 season, the Sonics said.

Chrysler is in business to stay.

Chrysler has the backing needed to reaffirm its position as a vital part of the North American automotive industry, and to continue building the vehicles Canadian drivers want and need.

This will return Chrysler to a position of profitability and importance in Canada's economy.

This ensures that you, the Canadian driver, can be more confident than ever of the benefits of owning a Chrysler product.

Delivering a superior product, a product right for the times, is what The New Chrysler Corporation is all about.

Chrysler led North America into the age of fuel-efficient, 4 cylinder front-wheel drive cars with the successful Plymouth Horizon and Dodge Omni, Plymouth TC3 and Dodge 024.

This Fall, when the 1981 models are unveiled, Chrysler will make your economical front-wheel drive car choice even greater with the new front-wheel drive K cars: Dodge Aries and Plymouth Reliant.

Aries and Reliant will be totally new 2 door, 4 door and station wagon models, and are projected to give superior fuel economy and provide more interior room than GM's X cars. With six passenger capacity.

By 1984, all cars built by The New Chrysler Corporation will be front-wheel drive cars that are high in fuel efficiency.

But you don't have to wait.

You can have the best in fuel economy from Chrysler right now.

There isn't another domestic car that betters Horizon and Omni in fuel economy.

Seems like everyone is talking about fuel economy today. Chrysler has the fuel figures that lead the pack.

Just pick up a copy of Transport Canada's Fuel Consumption Guide.

You'll discover Plymouth Horizon and Dodge Omni rate an impressive 7.8 litres of gasoline per 100 kilometres driven.

Or, if you prefer to calculate by the old method, a whopping big 36 miles to the gallon.

Speaking of value, don't overlook Plymouth Volaré and Dodge Aspen. These success stories of the automotive industry represent the best value on the market today.

The Volaré or Aspen you buy for less than $6,150. isn't a stripped down car either. It's beautifully equipped.

It comes with dependable, economical 3.7L Slant Six engine and fuel-saving Torqueflite automatic transmission. It comes with glass-belted whitewall radials, bumper guards front and rear, deluxe wheel covers. It comes with power steering. And a lot more.

Citation's price is close to $1,500. more.

And they only have room for five.

Based on manufacturer's suggested retail price obtainable from published sources. Local taxes and transportation not included.* Dealer may sell for less.

The greatest strength of the New Chrysler Corporation can be found in the network of Dodge and Plymouth dealers over 600 strong, and the vehicles and service they provide. All you have to do is drop in, to discover the Chrysler built car or truck that's right for you.

And you'll probably find it's available for immediate delivery.

From the 4 cylinder front-wheel drive economy of Horizon and Omni, to the personal sports car flair of newly designed Chrysler Cordoba that is 17 percent more fuel efficient than last year's model, to the competitive features of ram tough Dodge trucks or vans.

Yes, you can be confident there's a Chrysler built car or truck available right now to deliver the performance you're after.

Chrysler has improved the quality of its products over 32 percent in the past year.

But don't think we're resting there.

The new front-wheel drive K cars will have 2 million miles of testing before any are delivered to our customers.

The new limited edition Imperial will be the ultimate state-of-the-art computer engineered car. Unequalled in performance and luxury, and featuring electronic fuel injection.

The new smaller Dodge van/wagons in a size of the times just perfect to fit in your garage, will revolutionize the industry when they're introduced a few years from now.

With the finest products in their class today, and a great lineup of cars and trucks in the future, Chrysler is in business all right.

Rockies fire Cherry

DENVER (AP) — Colorado Rockies have fired Don Cherry, the colorful and controversial coach who team owners described as the best in his profession when they hired him one year ago.

Cherry's firing was announced Tuesday, when Armand Pohan, president of the National Hockey League club, ended six weeks of uncertainty by saying, "You cannot run an effective organization when one man is at war with the rest of it."

Pohan confirmed the Rockies have been talking with U.S. Olympic hockey coach Herb Brooks about the Colorado job. Brooks was in Mexico on Tuesday and could not be reached for comment, but he has said he would abandon plans to coach in Switzerland next season if an NHL coaching post was available.

Cherry summed up Pohan's criticism of him as "a bunch of garbage."

"I'm happy I wasn't around for the crucifixion, because I would have been blamed for that."

Cherry was hired by the Rockies on May 30, 1979, soon after he left Boston Bruins amid a dispute with management. The Rockies had finished the 1978-79 season with the worst record in the NHL, and Cherry's hiring was hailed as the first step towards salvaging the franchise.

Cherry became a well-known and popular figure in Denver, and he helped the Rockies nearly double their average home attendance to almost 10,000 a game. However, the team ended with a 19-49-13 record, again the worst in the league, and Pohan blamed Cherry for the lack of improvement.

Pohan said the Rockies lost $2 million on both the 1978-79 and the 1979-80 seasons. Increased attendance brought in another $700,000 this last season, but it cost $700,000 for the numerous player trades.

Another disappointment for England's soccer side

WEMBLEY, England (AP) — England's soccer team struggled to a 1-1 tie with Northern Ireland in the British championship match on Tuesday night.

Liverpool striker David Johnson opened the scoring for England in the 80th minute, but substitute Terry Cochrane got the equalizer for Northern Ireland 60 seconds later.

It was England's second disappointing result in four days, coming after Saturday's 4-1 defeat by Wales.

England, one of the favorites for next month's European championships in Italy, never approached the form it showed in trouncing Argentina's World Cup titleholders 3-1 on the same field last week. A partisan crowd of 35,000 made its disapproval clear.

Canadian group forming pro hoop loop

HAMILTON (CP) — For decades, basketball players in Canada had one choice when finished with their university or college careers — work for a living.

However, Bill Mathison is trying to give them an alternative — play basketball for a living.

The Hamilton businessman is attempting to organize a professional men's Canadian Basketball League and has high hopes of getting it going this fall.

"There is no way we would have a problem forming a 10-team league," Mathison, league president, said in an interview Monday. "The people we have shown the total package to are very impressed."

He said the league's eight-member board of governors wants to have five teams in Eastern Canada and five in Western Canada. Cities the league are interested in are Halifax, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Hamilton, Windsor, Winnipeg, Calgary, Edmonton and Vancouver.

Cost of each franchise would be $25,000, plus an assurity bond.

"Anybody coming into the league should not expect to make a lot of money in the first couple of years. Right now, all we want is to get in and provide quality basketball and then take it from there."

Mathison, a partner of a firm ironically called Layup Inc., said obtaining players shouldn't be a problem.

"There are enough good college players and former National Basketball Association players around. I'm sure we can find 120 good basketball players that will provide excellent entertainment."

He said current plans all for three Americans eligible as imports on an 11 or 12-man team. First-year salaries will be comparable with the Canadian Football League.

Letters have been sent to university and college coaches asking for their cooperation in finding players eligible for a draft.

"The advent of professional basketball in Canada will produce several positive advantages for basketball at all levels. It will create a ground swell of renewed interest in basketball throughout the country."

Preakness review assured by board

BALTIMORE (AP) — The thoroughbred board of the Maryland Racing Commission promised prompt action Tuesday on an appeal of a ruling made Saturday by Pimlico stewards after the running of the Preakness Stakes.

Mr. and Mrs. Bert Firestone, owners of runner-up Genuine Risk, have asked for a review of the stewards' decision, which disallowed a claim of foul by jockey Jacinto Vasquez against winner Codex and jockey Angel Cordero Jr.

"We probably will meet the first part of next week," said Robert W. Banning, chairman of the five-member board. "On the advice of counsel, until we hear all the evidence, we will discuss the matter with nobody."

Banning said until all appeals in the case are concluded, the Preakness purse involved in the dispute would not be distributed. The winner of the Triple Crown race is to get $180,600, with $40,000 going to the second-place finisher.

J. Fred Colwill, chief of the three stewards assigned by the state to Pimlico, said they are convinced they made the correct decision in disallowing the claim by Vasquez that Genuine Risk was bumped at the top of the stretch.

"But if we had the opportunity to do things over, we would post the inquiry sign immediately after the finish," Colwill said.

Colwill said he suggested to the other stewards, Edward R. Litzenberger and Clinton Pitts Jr., that they look at films of the race, but Vasquez claimed foul just as they were about to light the inquiry sign.

Colwill said the ruling was one of the hardest of his 20 years as a steward "because of the extreme importance of the race."

"I think many people viewed it from an emotional standpoint," he said. "They wanted the filly to win so she would have a chance to capture the Triple Crown. "But there's no place for emotion in the stewards' stand."

Genuine Risk was the first filly to win the Kentucky Derby in 65 years and was bidding to become the first of her sex to win the Preakness since 1924.

Following the 4¾-length victory by Codex, who was not nominated for the Derby, the Firestones appeared to have accepted the outcome. But by Monday they decided on an appeal and said should they win, the entire purse would be donated to the National Museum of Racing in Saratoga, N.Y., and to furthering equine research.

Rowing clinic scheduled

University of Victoria and the Royal Bank are co-sponsoring a free rowing clinic for children aged nine to 17 on Sunday.

An introduction to land-training techniques will be conducted at 9 a.m. in the McKinnon Gymnasium before buses transport the group to Elk Lake for the remainder of the session.

Parental consent is required and further information may be obtained by telephoning the recreational office at UVic at 477-6911, local 4787, or clinic organizer Sheila Serup at 385-0057.

Racing probe digs deeper

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York State racing and wagering board began a major probe of reported corruption in the thoroughbred industry Tuesday amid indications by a federal prosecutor that his investigation into the industry did not end with the conviction of former jockey Con Errico.

The board said it would probe the race fixing and payoff charges made at the bribery trial of Errico. The board said two lawyers armed with subpoena powers will do whatever necessary to determine whether the reports of corruption in the racing industry were true.

Federal prosecuter Neil Firetog may pressure Errico, 58, into naming other jockeys involved in racing fixing in exchange for a possible break in his sentence, the New York Daily News says in today's edition.

"I want these other jockeys to sweat," Firetog said outside the courtroom after Errico was convicted Monday of bribing jockeys to fix nine races at Aqueduct and Saratoga in 1974 and 1975.

Errico is to be sentenced June 18 and faces up to 20 years in prison and fines of up to $25,000. He said he would appeal the verdict.

Several allegations of corruption during the trial in Federal Court were made by jockey Jose Amy. Under oath, Amy, a witness for the prosecution, swore that at least 11 other prominent jockeys had discussed their involvement in race fixing. Among those named were Angel Cordero, Jr., Jacinto Vasquez and Jorge Velasquez, whose mounts finished 1-2-3 in last Saturday's Preakness Stakes.

Boat ban has exiles steaming

KEY WEST, Fla. (AP) — Cuban-American exiles, outraged over the overloading of refugee boats by Cuban authorities and at President Carter's efforts to end the boatlift, are threatening demonstrations unless the federal government lifts its ban against boats going to Cuba.

Two representatives of Miami-based United Cubans are flying to Washington today to meet with congressmen and state department officials.

Miami businessman Wilfredo Navarro and Frank Sturgis, a former Cuban security chief later arrested in the Watergate burglary, have chartered 20 shrimp boats capable of carrying 150 passengers each and want permission to send them to Mariel harbor.

Since Carter called for an end to the so-called Freedom Flotilla a week ago, U.S. Coast Guard cutters have intercepted and turned back vessels attempting to leave Florida for Cuba.

Cuban-Americans are worried that the boatlift will end before all refugees who want to leave have been picked up, Navarro said.

A steady stream of refugee-packed boats continue to arrive here, pushing the 32-day total past 65,000. Many small boats have been overloaded with passengers that include women, children and the elderly.

Cuban authorities say about 700 boats remain at Mariel. Thousands of Cubans are reported waiting in a warehouse near Mariel or cowering in their homes as they await buses to transport them to the harbor.

Riot-causing death probed

MIAMI (AP) — A U.S. federal grand jury opens an investigation today into the beating death that triggered Miami's deadliest race riots as President Carter considers a request for funds to heal the city's wounds.

Miami authorities reported that relative calm prevailed overnight Tuesday as more than 130 square kilometres of the city remained under curfew. There were scattered reports of fires and gunshots early today. More than 3,500 national guardsmen continued to patrol troubled neighborhoods.

The Miami riot has claimed 15 lives and left 2,500 people jobless. Property damage is estimated at up to $100 million.

Rioting erupted Saturday after an all-white jury in Tampa acquitted four white former policemen on charges ranging from second-degree murder to evidence tampering in the death of Arthur McDuffie, a black Miami businessman.

U.S. Attorney-General Benjamin Civiletti promised that, besides the grand jury investigation, the justice department will review 14 other cases of alleged police brutality in southern Florida for possible civil rights violations.

Reagan romps in Oregon

The Associated Press

Slowed but virtually unstoppable, Ronald Reagan is preparing for a victory rally on June 3, the day he expects to lock up the Republican presidential nomination.

Reagan and challenger George Bush traded primary victories Tuesday — Bush in a Michigan landslide, the frontrunner winning easily in Oregon.

Bush won 57 per cent to 32 per cent in Michigan; Reagan received 58 per cent of the Oregon vote, Bush 33 per cent.

Meanwhile, President Carter took another stride toward renomination by defeating Senator Edward Kennedy in Oregon's Democratic election. The poll gave Carter 59 per cent, Kennedy 32 per cent.

Kennedy said he had not expected to win but thinks he can prevail in "the real superbowl of the Democratic primaries," the eight elections on June 3.

Carter also held a 2-to-1 lead over Kennedy in Utah's Democratic caucuses, conducted two days ago, with the official count due today.

Carter gained 26 delegates in Oregon and now has 1,391 of the 1,666 he needs for the nomination. Kennedy has 782..

Phone wires to home cut before blaze

Times News Service

KINGSTON — Jamaican police today moved the remains of at least 157 elderly women who died Tuesday in what authorities have confirmed was a deliberately-set fire, and it was thought the toll could go higher.

Police spokesmen said Tuesday night telephone wires leading from the three-building complex for the aged, mentally retarded and orphans were cut just before the fire started.

Afghan rebel killed in border raid

Iran revolutionaries shoot drug dealers

Meanwhile, the U.S. hostages spent their 200th day in captivity, although Iran's ambassador to the UN said their continued detention is not in Iran's best interests.

And in a reference to race riots in Miami, one of Iran's most influential revolutionary leaders said Iran should support American blacks who have "revolted."

The latest executions were reported by Iran's official Pars news agency. It is believed to be the largest number of people executed at one time since the Iranian revolution 16 months ago.

Pars said the 20 were convicted of selling heroin after a four-day trial conducted by Ayatollah Sadeq Khalkhali, who is in charge of Iran's anti-drug strike force.

Iran's UN ambassador, Mansour Farhang, said in an interview with a Tehran newspaper that Iran has reaped all the "political propaganda" to be had from the seizure of the hostages.

The continued captivity of the 53 Americans is putting Iran in a position of "international isolation," Farhang said.

The ambassador said he believes the aborted U.S. mission to free the hostages has made it more difficult to gain their release but added: "I think continuing to hold hostages isn't at all in line with our benefits."

The interview was published by Enghelab Islami, a newspaper founded by Iranian president Abolhassan Bani-Sadr who has said he wants the crisis ended so that Iran can concentrate on domestic issues.

His efforts to free the hostages have been thwarted by Iran's Revolutionary Council and the all-powerful Ayatollah Khomeini.

Another of Iran's hardline leaders, Ayatollah Mohammad Beheshti said today Iran should support blacks who have "revolted in the United States."

Beheshti, who heads the justice ministry, told reporters he believes "we should support those blacks that have revolted in the United States because it is our duty to support all the deprived people in the world."

But he said it is up to his own Islamic Republican party to make up its own mind on the Miami riots and support for blacks in the U.S.

Khomeini says the new parliament, which is to meet for the first time May 28, will decide the fate of the hostages. A majority of parliamentary members are hardline Islamic fundamentalists, many of whom demand the return to Iran of Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, ousted by Khomeini's revolution 16 months ago.

In Washington, State Secretary Edmund Muskie said Tuesday that as a stable government emerges in Iran, "it will have to be concerned with establishing a normal role for itself in the world" and will work to end the crisis.

Muskie said the Carter administration's current strategy to free the hostages is based on the combined pressure from economic sanctions with the "intense pursuit of diplomatic initiatives."

The Associated Press

Two helicopter gunships were reported Tuesday to have crossed into Iran from Afghanistan and fired rockets on an area used as a refuge by Moslem Afghan guerrillas, killing one person. Iran played down the incident.

"Such undeliberate aggressions are expectable in all sensitive borders," the official Iranian news agency Pars quoted Iranian presidential press adviser Musavi Garmaroudi as saying. "The helicopters were chasing Afghan militants when they violated Iranian territory."

Pars said the helicopters attacked an area 40 kilometres south of Tayebad in eastern Iran Tuesday morning, hitting workers' houses.

It quoted Mohammad Toliati, governor of nearby Bakhazar, as saying Iranian border guards fired at the Soviet-made helicopters but did not damage them.

Iran has repeatedly condemned the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan and has declared its support for the Moslem guerrillas fighting the Soviet-backed Afghan government.

There have been frequent reports of Soviet troops and tanks massing near the Iranian border, but all of them have proved erroneous. Toliati was quoted as saying 400 Soviet tanks were stationed along the Iranian border during the weekend.

Meanwhile, at the 40-country Islamic foreign ministers' conference in Islamabad, Pakistan, a leader of the Islamic Alliance for the Liberation of Afghanistan urged foreign ministers of Islamic states to sever ties with Moscow until it withdraws its approximately 80,000 troops from Afghanistan.

An estimated 260 Soviet soldiers were reported killed during an unsuccessful two-week offensive designed to dislodge rebels from mountain strongholds in eastern Afghanistan, according to a report reaching New Delhi on Tuesday.

The report described the fighting as some of the heaviest of the two-year civil war waged by rebels against a succession of three Marxist governments.

The rebel alliance, which includes five main insurgent organizations, demanded the Islamic states withhold recognition of Babrak Karmal, installed as president of Afghanistan during a Soviet-backed coup last Christmas, and recognize the alliance as the sole, legitimate representative of Afghanistan.

Saudi Arabia, which is attending the Islamic conference, announced Tuesday that it is providing $25 million for Afghan refugees. The United Arab Emirates and Malaysia also pledged refugee aid. There are approximately 700,000 Afghan refugees in Pakistan alone.

However, pro-Soviet Arab countries have been trying to persuade the conference to authorize contacts with the Afghan government, which is suspended from the conference.

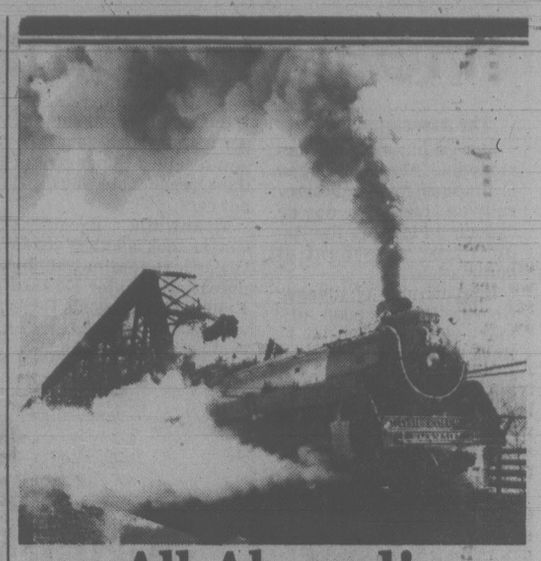

The Palestine Liberation Organization and Arab countries such as Libya and Syria want Afghanistan's suspension lifted and direct talks with Karmel's Marxist government in Kabul.

The political experts meeting at the Islamic foreign ministers' conference are reported to have worked out details of the Moslem world's next moves towards a settlement of the Afghan crisis.

But a conference spokesman refused to say Tuesday what is envisaged before the plan is finalized.

On the Iranian crisis, the spokesman said the conference, now in its final stages, is being urged to condemn "U.S. agression against Iran" but that this is being balanced by a plea to Iran to end its hostage dispute with Washington as quickly as possible.

In London, the British foreign secretary, Lord Carrington, was quoted as saying "the Soviet Union does not exclude a political settlement" to the Afghan crisis. Carrington met with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromkyo in Vienna last Saturday.

Nuclear garbage rockets to orbit?

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. government is considering packing nuclear wastes in rockets and launching them to safe dumping grounds in galaxies far, far away.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration awarded a $296,000 contract to the Boeing Co. Monday to help learn whether potentially dangerous wastes can be fired into eternal orbit about the sun, into another solar system or elsewhere in the universe.

The four-year study project is a joint effort of NASA and the department of energy. They will decide the next step after Boeing reports its initial assessment in December.

Under the contract, Boeing is to study how best to launch nuclear garbage — by an unmanned rocket or by a manned vehicle whose crew would eject it into space; where in space to put it; how to protect the payload both during launch and in space, and how to retrieve a payload from the ocean bottom or elsewhere if there is an abort on liftoff.

Space dumping has been considered a possibility for several years, but the contract award to Boeing is the first time the government has launched a serious study.

One concept would send a payload close enough to the sun so it would burn up, its radiation mixing with the massive radiation spewing from solar flares and storms.

The move points up the problem of what to do with the increasing amount of nuclear trash being produced. The government estimates the United States is turning out almost 100,000 cubic feet of high-and low-level radiation waste a year, mostly poisonous by-products of nuclear power, weapons tests and medical research, and that this may grow to 650,000 cubic feet by the year 2000.

Several questions have been raised about whether the debris can be stored without risk to humans or the environment. Some storage facilities have been closed by local authorities and others are filling at a rapid rate.

U.S. President Jimmy Carter in February proposed a $700 million study of salt domes and other sites in the South and West, trying to find the best place where stainless steel containers could be safely deposited for the thousands of years it will take for the wastes to lose their radiation.

Gunman kills 2 in court

MELBOURNE (AP) — A screaming gunman charged through the Australian Supreme Court today, killing two men with point-blank shots to the head and wounding two men and one woman.

The gunman was later captured in a flying tackle outside the court complex by a senior police constable as the dead and injured laid in pools of blood in a court corridor.

It was the third serious breach of court security in Melbourne in the last 18 months.

Police did not immediately identify by name any of the victims.

Chief Inspector Paul Delianis, head of the homicide squad, said the shooting was connected with the handing down of a judgment in one of the courts concerning a disputed bank account. He did not elaborate.

The gunman was said to be in his late 30s.

Eighteen months ago, security was tightened in Melbourne courts after the attempted kidnap of a county court judge.

Five more major oil exporters hike price

LONDON (Reuter) — Five more major oil producing countries have joined the latest round of price leap-frogging, jeopardizing Saudi Arabia's attempt to control the chaotic world market.

Last night Iraq, Kuwait, the United Arab Emirates, Venezuela joined the list of member nations of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to announce increases in the price of a barrel of crude.

Today, Qatar also said it would increase its prices, retroactive to May 1.

Indonesia, Libya and Algeria had already put up their prices following Saudi Arabia's decision on May 14 to add an extra two dollars a barrel.

The two dollar Iraqi increase, backdated to May 1, brings its official price to an average $30 U.S. a barrel, although a variety of premiums are also imposed.

Kuwait's two dollar rise takes its barrel price to $29.50 and a similar increase by the United Arab Emirates brings the price of its crude to $31.65.

Venezuela announced increases of up to $3.50 a barrel beginning Monday.

Venezuela is the single-biggest supplier of imported crude to Canada, accounting for 34 per cent of the 660,000 barrels Canada must import daily to meet its energy requirments.

About 35 per cent of Canada's crude-oil imports, or seven per cent of its total consumption, comes from Saudi Arabia.

Saudi Arabia said its pricing decision, which led to the latest round of increases, was part of an attempt to reunify OPEC prices and restore order to the oil market.

The biggest obstacle to a return to OPEC price unity was that Saudi Arabian light crude, the traditional "benchmark", was underpriced in relation to the rest of OPEC oil in the reigning free-for-all pricing system.

But when Saudi Arabia tried to remedy this last week, price "hawks" Algeria and Libya simply imposed their own increases at the top end of the spectrum and the gap remained as wide as ever.

The latest round of increases is taking the average posted price of OPEC oil to $31.50 a barrel U.S. compared to $25.50 last December and around $13 in January 1979.

Oil industry executives say prospects have now faded for a return to price unity when OPEC ministers next meet in Algiers on June 9.

Saudi Arabia, which is producing about 9.5 million barrels of crude a day, is capable of pumping out an extra two million barrels a day at short notice for a limited period, but it is not speeding up its output capacity as has been reported in the West, Saudi sources said.

Thatcher, Haughey try again

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain and Prime Minister Charles Haughey of the Irish Republic will renew attempts in London today to devise a formula for peace in Northern Ireland.

The overwhelmingly Roman Catholic republic claims sovereignty over the province, but Northern Ireland's Protestant majority bitterly opposes unification with a country some believe is out to destroy them.

Mrs. Thatcher appears committed to restoring some form of regional autonomy in the province, probably through a Protestant-dominated administration with political guarantees for the Catholic minority. Haughey believes this formula will only perpetuate the sectarian and political bloodletting that has dragged on for 11 years.

$100M cocaine cache found in border check

FLORIDA CITY, Fla. (AP) — A U.S. Border Patrol agent, suspicious of a 1980 car with its fender scraping the road, has made the largest cocaine seizure in U.S. history, confiscating up to $100-million worth of the drug, authorities said today.

In the trunk, Dutcher discovered two duffel bags filled with small plastic bags containing a total of 401 pounds of cocaine.

Doctor takes Darvon to Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — A consumer health specialist is urging the U.S. Congress to ban the painkiller Darvon, contending it is a form of "legalized dope" which has been responsible for more than 11,000 deaths in the last eight years.

Sidney Wolfe, a physician who heads the Public Citizen Health Research Group, was to make his case for tighter controls on one of the most popular U.S. prescription drugs at a hearing today before a House of Representatives interstate and foreign commerce subcommittee on health.

He said the drug is no more effective than aspirin but is responsible for more deaths than any other prescription product because it is frequently prescribed and there are loose restrictions on refills.

Health department officials in Ottawa are investigating deaths in Canada known to involve Darvon.

The officials have said previously there is evidence the drug can be dangerous when abused intentionally but is safe when used as recommended.

Darvon is sold only on prescription in Canada.

In testimony prepared for the subcommittee, Wolfe said the fact that this "narcotic drug — tantamount to legalized dope — is a serious public health problem is not arguable."

He cited other estimates from the Drug Abuse Warning Network that there have been about 79,000 hospital emergency-room visits involving Darvon since 1972, the first year data was collected.

If a ban on the drug seems too stringent, Congress should at least order federal programs such as Medicare and Medicaid to stop paying for its use and doctors should be urged to deny their patients automatic refills, Wolfe said.

Earlier this year, a United Nations commission on Narcotic Drugs has asked its members to observe production quotas on propoxyphene products.

Blessed are they who serve the Lord. It's just that Andre Ostlund thinks they should get paid overtime too. Ostlund, vicar of Umea parish in Sweden's far north, put in his claim for better pay and conditions. "I work on average 53 hours a week," he said. "I think I should be paid overtime." Swedish law says anyone working more than 40 hours a week must be paid overtime. But the priesthood is an exception to the law. "The law should apply to our work too," said Ostlund. "I have asked my diocese to alter the conditions of service. It is just not on. I have a slave contract." Swedish priests earn up to $1,555 a month. A spokesman for the diocese head office said Ostlund's request for 13 hours overtime a week would be refused.

Fonda

Alfred Hitchcock, the rotund mystery master of film who died last month at the age of 80, left most of his estate to his wife Alma. Hitchcock's will, which was dated Aug. 8, 1963, and contained at least six codicils, was filed for probate Los Angeles Superior Court. The estate included property, automobiles and personal effects, but there was no estimate of value in the court documents.

Princess Margaret is again suffering from a stomach infection, which prevented her from attending the wedding of a friend. The queen's younger sister, 50, was confined to bed for several days in February with a virus infection and underwent surgery for the removal of a benign skin tumor in January. In March, she called off an inspection of British troops in West Germany but no official reason was given. Press reports at the time said she looked ill. Since then she cut short a visit to the Philippines after experiencing stomach problems there.

Hollywood insiders say Jane Fonda doesn't practise what she preaches. Although a message of her latest film Nine to Five is that secretaries are underpaid and exploited, staffers working for her own organization, the Campaign for Economic Democracy, earn only $200 a week — about $125 a week less than secretaries for Twentieth Century-Fox, the movie's producer. But Fonda isn't fazed by the comparison, saying her group's workers are so committed to her political goals money isn't important to them.

Dear Abby

All through grade school, Peter, the boy who lived next door, was my childhood sweetheart. He moved away when I was 12, and we lost track of each other.

Six months ago we met at a political rally and recognized each other immediately. (I'm 22 and Peter is 23). We had a wonderful time talking about old times, and you might say it was love at second sight. We've been inseperable ever since. We are planning to marry, but here comes the bizarre part. When I told my mother about our plans to marry, she told me something that realy shook me up. She said that the man I always thought was my father is not my father. My father was Peter's father. That makes Peter my half-brother. Can a woman marry her half-brother?

Still Dazed

Dear Still:

Dear Abby:

Through you I hope to express my gratitude to those in the counseling profession who have dedicated their lives to helping others.

I am 23 and will soon graduate in a helping profession. I am a survivor of several suicide attempts. After working for three long years getting to know myself, I finally discovered that I like myself and really want to live. Most of my life I was unable to say that. I attribute my survival to my therapists, without whose steadfast suport and faith I would have been dead. They never gave up on me despite my self-hatred. Now I feel like a beautiful butterfly that has finally come out of my cocoon of despair, uncertain but ready to fly! I will be forever grateful to my threapists who showed me that I could open the door and choose life.

I hope you will find room in your column to let those in the often thankless counseling profession know that they are those who are thankful.

Glad To Be Alive

Dear Glad:

And I am glad to print your letter. Congratulations. Without your co-operation, your therapist could not have saved your life.

Dear Abby:

This is my fourth try at having you run something that I feel would hit home with many people in all kinds of relationships, but particularly regarding physical intimacy.

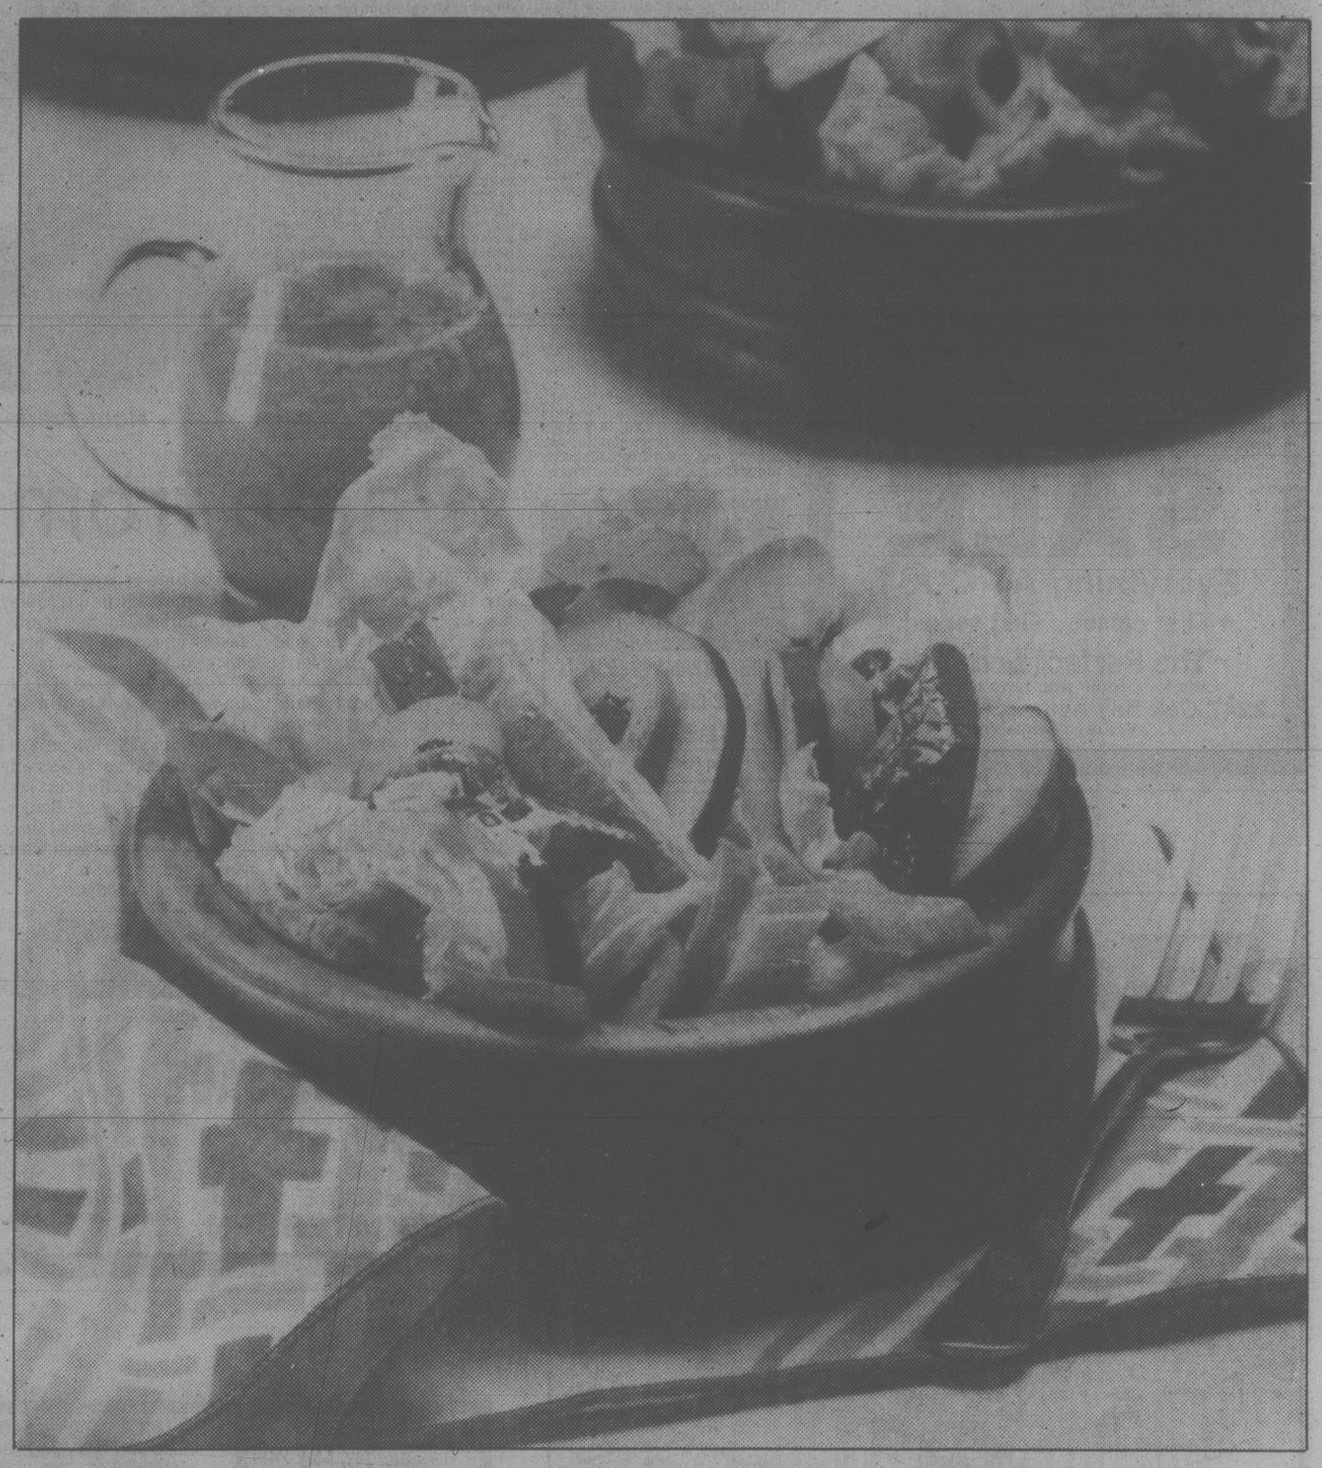

Volumes have been written on the how-to's of sex, but the biggest turn-on is cleanliness — good old fashioned soap and water clean! That means hair, fingernals, teeth, clothing — the works. Nothing is so discouraging to intimacy as slightly soiled clothing, or a hint of odor to suggest that the hair, mouth or body is less than clean. I am a woman, and the greatest turn-on to me is a scrubbed man, with clean clothing from the skin out!

Sunny south springs salads

Welcome the advent of spring with fresh crisp salads. Although all our local produce may not be in season for a bit of time yet, generous supplies of top-quality vegetables from California and Mexico are being featured in most local grocery stores.

Fresh fruits and vegetables are naturally rich in fibre, vitamins and minerals. A salad may serve as a nutritious compliment to any meal, or as a meal in itself. Be creative and experiment ... you can only win.

Shades O'Green Salad is made protein-rich with addition of hearty slices of avocado

SHADES O'GREEN SALAD

- 3 cups spinach (about)
- 4 stalks celery
- ½ green pepper
- 1 cucumber
- 2 tablespoons chopped chives
- ½ head lettuce
- 6 stuffed green olives
- 1 small avocado
- ⅓ cup French dressing

Chill six individual salad bowls in refrigerator. Remove and discard tough stems and bruised leaves from the spinach. Wash, drain and pat dry. Use part of the spinach to line the salad bowls. Set the remainder aside.

Cut the celery, green pepper and cucumber into slices. Rinse, drain and pat dry the lettuce. Tear lettuce and reserved spinach into pieces. Toss vegetables with lettuce, spinach and chopped chives. Add dressing. Toss lightly to coat greens evenly.

Arrange individual portions of salad in bowls. Slice green olives. Rinse, peel, cut into halves lengthwise, remove pit and slice avocado. Garnish salad with avocado and olive slices.

Serves six.

FRENCH DRESSING

This delicious dressing also serves as the basis for a number of tantalizing variations. Use a pure vegetable oil to avoid a "heavy" taste and allow the flavor of the vegetables to shine through.

- ¾ cup oil
- ¼ cup lemon juice or cider vinegar
- 1 tablespoon sugar or honey
- ¾ tablespoon salt
- ¼ teaspoon paprika
- ¼ teaspoon powdered mustard
- ¼ teaspoon pepper

Combine the above ingredients in a screw-top jar. Cover tightly and shake vigorously to blend well. Store covered in refrigerator. Shake well before using.

Makes about a cup.

Variations:

1. "Lorenzo French Dressing." Follow recipe for French Dressing. Add ¼ cup finely chopped watercress and 2 tablespoons chili sauce. Shake well.

2. "Curried French Dressing." Follow recipe for French Dressing. Add ¼ teaspoon curry powder. Shake well.

3. "Honey French Dressing." Follow recipe for French Dressing, but use lemon juice. Blend in ½ cup honey and ¼ teaspoon grated lemon peel. For added flavor, add ½ teaspoon celery seed and shake well.

FRESH TOMATO MARINADE

- 4 large tomatoes, peeled and sliced
- 1 cup oil
- ¼ cup vinegar
- 1 large garlic clove, minced
- 1 tablespoon minced scallion or onion
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ¼ teaspoon black pepper
- 1 tablespoon chopped basil
- 1 teaspoon chopped thyme
- ½ teaspoon chopped marjoram

To peel tomatoes, dip in boiling water, then submerge in cold water. The skin can be easily removed.

If fresh herbs are not available, substitute flaked, dried herbs.

Serves 4.

TOMATO ARTICHOKE SALAD

- 6 medium tomatoes, sliced
- 4 stalks celery, sliced
- ½ cup sauterne
- 2 small onions, diced
- 1 clove garlic
- 2 4-oz. jars marinated artichoke hearts
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ¼ teaspoon pepper
- ½ cup warm beef broth or bouillon

Drain artichoke hearts. Reserve marinade. Cut artickoke hearts in half, place in large salad bowl. Combine wine, lemon juice and reserved marinade. Pour over artichoke hearts.

Add celery, tomatoes and onions.

Mash garlic clove with salt and pepper. Add to beef broth and mix well. Pour over vegetables.

Marinate at least 15 minutes.

Serve with French bread.

Serves 6 to 8.

SOUR CREAM CUCUMBER SALAD

- 4 medium cucumbers
- ¾ cup sour cream
- 1½ tablespoons vinegar
- 2 tablespoons oil (do not substitute olive oil)
- ¼ teaspoon sugar
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ¼ teaspoon pepper
- 3 tablespoons fresh minced dill or parsley*

*Use only 1½ tablespoons of dried herb if fresh is not available. Soak in water for 15 minutes.

Peel cucumbers. Slice thinly. Combine sour cream, vinegar, oil, sugar, salt and pepper. Pour over cucumbers. Cover and chill for one hour or more. Sprinkle with minced dill or parsley before serving.

Serves 6.

STUFFED "TOPEPPERS"

- 4 medium tomatoes
- 2 medium peppers
- 8 eggs, hard boiled
- ⅔ cup mayonaise
- ¼ cup diced sweet pickles
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ¼ teaspoon pepper
- ½ teaspoon paprika
- 1 tablespoon chopped chives
- lettuce

Wash tomatoes and peppers. Cut top ⅓ off tomatoes and save for sandwiches or salads. Scoop out pulp from rest of tomato. Set tomatoes aside.

Cut off top ½ inch of peppers and discard. Remove seeds. Carefully slice two (2) 1" rings from each pepper. (Save the bottom of the pepper for use in other salads.)

Serves 4.

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

Many women who have just given birth and who do not want to breast-feed their infants have a problem suppressing the milk formation, or lactation. Estrogen, the female sex hormone, has been the method of choice for this process up to now.

A newly-approved drug, bromocriptine, is now being effectively substituted for the steroid hormone, estrogen. Dr. John Tyson, of the University of Manitoba in Winnipeg found that he can reduce lactation in almost 90 per cent of women by using this drug. In a huge study, both in Canada and in the United States, it was found that there are remarkably few side effects with the use of bromo-criptine.

Allergists at the Johns Hopkins Medical School seem to be on the brink of a new and interesting approach to the control of hay fever. The conventional method of desensitization has always been difficult for suffering this condition.

Dr. Philip S. Norman is approaching the problem from a different angle. He and his colleagues are working with ragweed pollen in the same way that diphtheria germs were first inactivated to make vaccines. By their technique, it is possible to diminish the irritating desensitization shots that are now used.

In a preliminary study of more than 200 patients, it was found that they could be immunized against ragweed in only five visits. This is a noteworthy accomplishment because, at the present time, 20 to 25 visits are necessary for complete desensitization.

It is expected that other forms of inhalant allergies may eventually be treated by this interesting technique.

The carotid artery brings blood from the heart to the brain. Problems within this artery are responsible for many of the strokes and ischemic attacks to the brain.

A new micro-computer, using ultrasonic vibrations, can detect earlier potential problems in the carotid artery that might otherwise have gone unnoticed.

Dr. Richard D. Miles, and his co-workers, at the Southern Illinois University, are using their medical and engineering skills to refine the instruments that hold such exciting promise for the future.

The new instrument shows the carotid artery simultaneously and in three dimensions. It is hoped that this brilliantly devised, but simple, procedure will detect trouble in the arteries long before major symptoms present themselves.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological Forecast for Thursday, May 22, 1980
By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): New approach to basic issues is necessary. Strive to extricate self from "clutches" of one who uses and abuses you. Events go your way where employment, special services — and contests — are concerned. You make contact which could start "something big."

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Young person becomes valuable ally, you gain impetus as result of association with creative, dynamic individual. Cancer, Capricorn, Aquarius persons figure in scenario. Changes due — you finally are "out of rut." Follow through on hunch.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Refuse to be caught in middle of family dispute. Be flexible, display humor and reach beyond apparent limitations. Another Gemini and a Sagittarian play prominent roles. Check safety measures in connection with property or home.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Obtain hint by studying Gemini message. You gain access to information enabling you to secure position. Accent on short trips, messages, relatives in a "mood" for controversy. Routine is subject to quick change. Have written material at hand.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Be aware of costs, requisites for special participation in money-making project. A key person stands ready to aid your cause — you need only to throw aside false pride. Ask and you will receive — Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius persons dominate exciting scenario.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You get excellent news concerning basic values, property rights, family reunions. Moon in your sign coincides with new starts, greater independence, initiative. Sharp timing and correct judgment. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio persons figure prominently.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Much that occurs is behind scenes, clandestine or intentionally hidden from view. You may be asked to appear before the media. Know it and prepare accordingly. Whatever the situation, delve beneath superficial presentations. Be direct in defining terms.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Go all the way — take cold plunge. Specifically, you are involved in vigorous campaign, affair of heart and what could be a major financial maneuver. Spotlight on romance, money that accrues from business investment. Cancer, Capricorn natives figure prominently.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Emphasis on special honor, civic duty, valid opportunity to advance reputation and career. You are due to complete a very important project. Communicate, publicize, advertise, make move to improve distribution and display of product.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Take initiative locating "missing link." Leo, Aquarius persons figure prominently. Accent on law, publishing, long-distance communication and travel. What was far from your reach will now become available — much to your advantage.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You learn more about lease requirements, rentals, interest payments and loans. Partner or mate confides concern over financial matters. Check directions, instructions and legal loopholes. Another Aquarian plays significant role.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Gain overall view; leave details, direct confrontations for another time. Maintain low profile. Permit one close to you to take initiative. Be discreet, gather data for future use. Become thoroughly familiar with legal rights and permissions.

IF MAY 22 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are versatile, willing to break rules if you feel they abuse principles. Some persons consider you rebellious and muckraker. You are willing to tear down for ultimate purpose of rebuilding on a more solid structure. It is not unlikely that you were separated from one or both parents at a relatively early age. You possess an inner confidence which practically amounts to having a blueprint of your future goal. Aquarius, Taurus, Scorpio persons play important roles in your life. August will be one of your most memorable months of 1980, a year in which you gain added recognition and knock on door of fame and riches.

Homemade pastas can taste just as good as toppings or stuffings

Pasta from scratch beats all

the 60-minute gourmet

Ravioli, generally no better than ordinary when bought in stores and most restaurants, is in fact one of the most subtle and variable dishes ever exported by Italy. That point is made at once when you've tasted ravioli stuffed with calf's brains and spinach or with sausage, prosciutto and Parmesan cheese.

But you don't find ravioli stuffed with these things in the supermarket freezer, and in any case, although it can be time-consuming, the best approach to introducing yourself to the many tastes of ravioli is to produce your own pasta.

A number of devices have been designed to make ravioli. There is a rolling pin that, when it is rolled over two layers of dough with filling in between, shapes the dough into small packages that can then be separated with a jagger, a pasta cutter with a circular-blade.

A chromed-brass pasta stamp with ridged edges will shape ravioli one piece at a time. There is also a machine that is cranked by hand and that will take two strips of filled dough and turn out ravioli with considerable speed.

The device that strikes me as the most sensible of the lot — because it is small and so simple to use that it is nearly foolproof — is a ravioli cutter (sometimes called a ravioli form) that resembles an ice cube tray.

To make ravioli using one, you cut a strip of dough that is roughly the shape of the form and press it into each of several squares to form pockets for the filling. After marble-sized balls of filling are dropped into place, a second strip of dough goes on top; a rolling pin is pushed over the pasta, cutting and sealing the ravioli as it goes along.

I've seen a number of variations of this cutter. One that I used recently and liked enormously is a cast-aluminum form, 12 inches long and 4 inches wide, that turns out 12 ravioli with each roll of the pin and sells for $12.50 at Dean & DeLuca, 121 Prince St.

The indentions for the filling are made very rapidly by a small sheet of aluminum that has a handle on one side and two mounds on the other side. You stamp out the indentations two at a time along the length of the ravioli form.

To make sure that the ravioli peels free after the pasta is shaped, the cutter should be floured before the first strip of dough is placed on it. And before covering that strip with the second one, the first strip's edges should be brushed with water to aid the formation of a firm seal.

The cutter is most efficient — and the ravioli tastes best — when the dough has been rolled to the proper thickness. It should be very thin. If you are not accustomed to dough rolling, converting a stiff ball of egg noodle dough into a paper-thin sheet can be exhausting. It is much easier to run the dough through the rollers of one of the many pasta machines designed for the home kitchen.

A reliable hand-cranked one is imported to the United States from Italy under the Atlas brand and sells for about $40.

Five senses used in baking of bread

your partner's cookbook

By MIKE McGRADY

Back to basics. I know of no cooking experience so basic, or quite so satisfying, as the baking of bread. Maybe because it deeply involves each of the five senses.

The sense of touch, for example. The cook is up to his elbows in bread dough, as closely involved with his work as a sculptor. Smell: No perfume from the blossoms of Araby can match the simple aroma of baking bread. Sight: Name any vision more enticing than the loaves of hot-from-the-oven bread — just waiting to melt butter. Taste, to be sure. And where, you ask, does the sense of sound come in? Well, if you don't hear cheers tonight, you never will.

This recipe came from my grandmother, Libby Robinson, and it has been handed down through the generations the way more affluent — but not richer — families might pass along brooches.

The Staples: Make sure these are all on hand: salt, pepper, brown sugar (or honey), eggs, butter, olive oil, wine vinegar, flour, Tabasco, cinnamon. Also: bread pans, a wooden spoon, a large mixing bowl, a rolling pin.

The Shopping List: One pound of bacon; whole wheat flour (5 pounds); yeast (three cakes or envelopes); five large Bermuda onions; two cans consomme; grated cheeses (gruyere and parmesan); roquefort cheese (4 ounces); one box raisins; lettuce.

Prepare in Advance: The bread. (Allow a whole afternoon for the baking.)

Begin with the bacon, frying it in a large skillet over medium heat. Allow the cooked bacon to drain on paper towels and set aside the bacon fat.

Put one cup of warm water — it should feel pleasantly warm to your wrist — in a small bowl and add a heaping teaspoon of sugar (or honey) and the yeast.

Begin the batter in a large mixing bowl. We'll start with a half cup of bacon fat. Purists may shudder at this and I must admit I've never seen another bread recipe that called for bacon fat. However, I've never tasted a bread this good. Perhaps there's a connection.

To the bacon fat, my grandmother would add two cups of raw or brown sugar — but honey is an acceptable substitute. And a tablespoon of salt. Then, one quart of very warm water.

And now the flour. Add the whole wheat flour one cup at a time, beating each cupful into the batter with a wooden spoon. It would be nice to give accurate flour measurements, but my grandmother never bothered too much with measuring. You'll probably use 12 or 13 cups in all. But now keep adding until the dough stiffens. About nine cups.

In a small mixing bowl, beat two eggs for just a couple of seconds and add them to the batter. And now add the original yeast mixture. You'll need more flour. Add just enough flour so the dough becomes a large ball that you can remove to a bread board, about three cups. (Caution! Be sure to dust your working surface with plenty of flour.)

Now the kneading. Allow at least 15 minutes for kneading the bread. Do not tear the dough but fold it over onto itself, using the heels of your hands to apply most of the pressure. Add more flour as long as the dough adheres to the table or poard. When the dough can be handled without the addition of more flour, it's close to ready.

Carefully oil the inside of your largest mixing bowl and put the ball of dough inside this. Cover it with a dampened dish towel and set it in a warm spot, perhaps near a radiator. The dough should rise to double its size in about an hour. Punch the dough back down to its original size and let it rise again, about 50 minutes.

When it has doubled its size, slice the dough into four equal parts. Oil the inside of the bread pans. Roll the dough balls into log shapes and press three of them into the bread pans.

Now for the cinnamon rolls. Using a rolling pin, roll the fourth dough ball into a thin sheet. Sprinkle sugar and cinnamon lightly over the entire surface. Then dot it with little pieces of butter and raisins. Roll this into a log and, using a sharp knife, cut off inch-wide slices. Place the slices on a greased cookie sheet.

As the dough rises a third time, about 30 or 40 minutes, pre-heat oven to 350 degrees. Bake the bread for 50 minutes then test — if bread is done it will make a hollow thumping sound when you rap against it. The cinnamon buns will be done in less time, about 30 minutes.

Also Prepare in Advance: The soup. Peel the onions and slice them thin. Melt half a stick of butter in a large pan over medium heat and add the onion rings. Cook them until they become transparent, then add two teaspoons of white flour. Cook for a couple of minutes, stirring, and then add the two cans of consomme and two cans of water.

Add salt and pepper to taste and simmer for at least 30 minutes. Just before serving, top with the grated cheeses.

Finally, the Salad: Rinse, dry and break up a head of lettuce. Add the bacon, broken into pieces. And the Delmonico dressing — a half-cup of olive oil, three tablespoons of wine vinegar, the crumbled Roquefort cheese, salt, pepper and a shot of Tabasco.

Seniors need to shop with care

Senior Canadians don't have special nutrient needs, but they often have many other needs which should be considered.

Plan meals ahead. Keep Canada's Food Guide in mind and include foods from the basic groups at each meal. Make your shopping list as complete as possible.

Shop with a friend and share too large containers of food or fresh produce such as a large head of cabbage. And shop when you're in good spirits — not when you're hungry or tired.

As much as possible, keep to the outside aisles in the grocery store. This is where you find meat, dairy products and fresh produce. It's a good way of overlooking the more expensive, processed and prepackaged foods that are usually found along the inner aisle.

Don't hesitate to ask the butcher to repackage meat into smaller portions if the packages on display don't suit your needs. You can do the same thing for fresh fruit and vegetables.

Convenience foods such as TV dinners and canned stews are nourishing. They're more expensive but easy to prepare and they cut down on leftovers.

Skim milk powder is economical and nutritious. Reconstitute the powder into fluid milk for drinking or use it in baking.

Buy fresh fruit and vegetables in season. That's when they're usually good buys.

And buy only what you can carry safely. You can always go back for seconds when you feel up to it.

Make chili

You can make your own chili powder by mixing ground chili pepper, ground cumin, garlic powder, ground oregano and salt.

Comfrey's comfortable added to many a meal

hilda beastall

Comfrey is a green vegetable that takes no skill in growing, rather it takes skill to prevent in encroaching on other plants. It grows anywhere in soil if it has moisture — in a big can or planter on balcony, patio, or it makes an attractive leafy and flowering plant for a square foot of dooryard.

Combined with spinach from garden or bought, comfrey offers a better texture of cooked green vegetable than spinach alone.

Vitamins A B C and E are found in comfrey and in spinach, as well as calcium and other useful minerals. Comfrey is rated with more protein than alfalfa which is noted as a valuable stock feed, and comfrey lacks the oxalic acid which makes high intake of spinach undesirable.

To cook Comfrey with Spinach: When spinach is bought it needs several quick washings in cold water to remove the sandy soil in which it is grown. When cooking alone, do not add water to spinach. The moisture adhering to the crinkly leaves is sufficient.

To add comfrey, wash the leaves and tips, and cut into half-inch sections, drop into pan among the spinach leaves. Cover, and cook on gentle heat for 10 minutes. If it is found that moisture is lacking in the pan, add a tablespoon of boiling liquid.

The mixed comfrey and spinach is now ready to serve or to use in several ways.

First, and taking least time, is a sort of fritter: Comfrey and Spinach Fritata.

Allow one cup of the mixed green vegetable for each serving, and two small eggs to each cup.

In skillet or large frypan, melt two tablespoons soft margarine until hot; spread cooked green vegetable flat in the pan an heat well. Lower heat. Beat eggs in a bowl with a few grains of salt, and pour evenly over the vegetable. Shake the pan over the heat to distribute the egg mixture well. Some of it should go through to the bottom.

Give the mixture three minutes with low heat, then cover and set aside for five minutes. Spread warmed wholewheat buns with margarine. Sprinkle with cut chives.

Four servings are made in big pan; or one as easily made in a small pan. It makes a good little meal.

Just as easily prepared are Comfrey-Spinach Tartlets, since the pastry cases can be made and baked ahead when using the oven for other baking. Store them baked, carefully, in film wrap in rigid container in top of refrigerator freezer to prevent breakage. If to keep only two days, stack carefully in container on refrigerator shelf.

These are good for light lunches for visitors, or as part of more substantial supper when not wanting to do much cooking.

COMFREY-SPINACH TARTLETS

1 cup mixed wholewheat and unbleached flour.
4 Tbsp. soft margarine
¼ tsp. salt
1 Tbsp. grated cheese.
1 small egg
1 Tbsp water (approx.)
2 cups cooked mixed comfrey and spinach, drained
2 hard boiled eggs.

Make a flexible pastry with first five ingredients, adding few drops of water if needed. Roll out on lightly floured board, cut into 2½-inch circles to line medium muffin pans. Bake blind (empty) in fairly hot oven 190 deg. C. until light brown. Makes 12.

Fill with hot cooked mixture of comfrey and spinach; top each tartlet with a little hard-boiled egg pushed through wire grater. Serve hot at once.

STEAMED GREEN SOUFFLE

1 cup cooked comfrey and spinach, drained
2 Tbsp. chopped chervil and parsley
½ tsp. chopped chives
3 small eggs, separated
½ cup skim milk from powder
1 Tbsp unbleached flour
1 Tbsp. soft margarine
Salt and a little powdered ginger.

Cover and steam gently for about 1½ hours — a little more or less does no harm.

The souffle can be turned out on a heated platter and served with bacon pieces cooked with chopped chives; or with buttered carrots sprinkled with parsley; or cooked brown rice with grated cheese topping. Will serve 3 or 4 depending on appetites and what is served with the souffle.

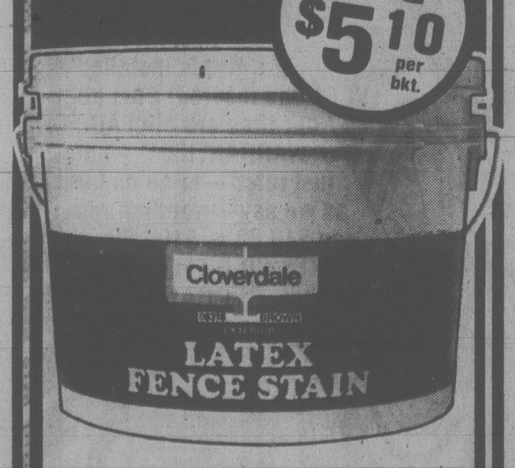

Cooked comfrey is a nutritious addition when folded into a souffle

Gripes of Roth spur dreams of Dixie

craig claiborne

A few weeks ago, I wrote an article about Sherrill Roth.

The spirit of the article was how to cope with cooking in the hinterlands when you can't suddenly get into a taxi and find the likes of fresh coriander, imported cheese, a dozen kinds of imported mustards and so on — all the fine things so immediately available in Manhattan.

This brought forth an amusing letter from John David Richardson of Manhattan, a true defender of the U.S. South, who says: "For the past few years I have been self-exiled here in Yankeeland and only a stone's throw from 'the tender herbs and vegetables of Balducci's' and two stone's throws from the bakers of Bleecker Street.

"Now that I know how Mrs. Roth solved her gustatory gripes, maybe you can help me with mine. I am what could be called an antigourmet. No, I don't attack my neighbor, James Beard — anti in the sense of 'opposite of,' i.e., I'm not particularly adept in the kitchen. However, I do love my native foods, the aforementioned Carolina cookin'.

"Now, what recourse do I have as a noncreative exile?

"Mail can travel the other way — South to North.

"Is there a Southern equivalent to your gourmet-goodies-by-post? (I dream of someday opening a shop called The Dixie Deli, complete with fly papers and a cooler of Nehi on the front porch; could I make a living peddling Moon Pies in Manhattan?)

"Is there a way for me to get liver mush (or liver pudding, if you prefer) without making a round trip on Piedmont?

"How can I overcome the lack of salt-rising bread here in this city where the little mites, whose efforts are accredited to salt, refuse to flourish (you already answered this one, and thanks?)

"Where can I get pimento cheese that is untrammeled by Kraft? (Actually, I have learned to prepare this.)

"Which bakeries can furnish me with light, delicious soda biscuits or crunchy-good corn bread made with white, stone-ground meal — and does not have the taste and texture of cake, Yankee style?

"And then there is the problem of fresh collard and turnip greens that only a trip to Harlem (had some good hoppin' john up there recently) can solve.

"Or consider the problem of explaining to a Yankee butcher what fatback is (when will Northerners learn English?).

"I could go on and on, but I think I've made my point (even Faulkner knew when to stop).

"When I first moved to New York, I asked the manager of my A&P if he would order some frozen collard greens for me; after all, other ethnics had aisles of pasta, rice and beans, pickled herring, etc., at their disposal. He gave me an astonished look and said as much as 'nice people don't eat collards.'

"After I knew him better, he did order the greens at my request.

"One Saturday morning I was awakened by a telephone call from him. 'Mr. Richardson,' he blurted, 'if you want the collards, you'd better get down here fast.'

"I got there in time to get the last package. There are evidently a lot of not very nice people in the Gramercy Park area!

"Another favorite tale along these lines concerns my friend, Sally Batson, from Greenville, S.C. She called one day to ask if I needed any mayonnaise.

"It seems that Sally, not finding Duke's mayonnaise at her local Gristedes, had written 'Mr. Duke.'

"His reply was a case of mayonnaise a la Richmond — and I'm sure Sally must still have some of this treasure stashed under her bed!

"I digress, but we Southern nongourmets do have problems, too — and a great deal of fun trying to solve them."

In response to a recent query, we stated that huile de noix, or walnut oil, which is widely used in French kitchens, could simply be substituted for olive oil when making salad dressings. John D. Baum of Oberlin, Ohio, describing a trip to France with his wife, writes:

"We had dinner at Barrier in Tours, where we had as a first course asparagus.

"It was served in the traditional way, with a little wedge to tilt the plate up and was dressed with huile de noix, i.e., walnut oil.

"It was delicious, and we have come to prefer this to any other sauce with asparagus.

"It is also delicious with artichoke in place of hollandaise or other sauce.

"It can, as you suggest, serve as a base for salad dressing, but I fear much of its distinctive taste will be lost under the cloud of vinegar and spices."

Accessories are the thing

WASHINGTON (CP) — Retailers anticipate a strong start to fashion accessories this fall, says Judy Karpinski, a merchandise manager for Garfinckel's. "The economy is so unsettled people won't spend the money on better ready-to-wear, but they will buy accessories to dress up what they already have," she says. Costume jewelry, handbags and scarves are expected favorites.

Jerky, chipped beef are two different items

question & answer

Q. I have been told that chipped beef and jerky are the same thing. I think not. Can you tell me?

A. No, they are not. Jerky is beef that is cut into thin long strips and dried in the sun. It is salted and eaten in various fashions. I have never tasted it cooked, but I understand that it is at times soaked for a long time and cooked in stews.

Chipped beef is beef that has been cured like corned beef in a brine. It is then smoked and dried and cut into the thinnest possible slices. It is most often served in a cream sauce.

Q. There are two hard-to-find and unrelated ingredients that I am most desirous of obtaining. They are candied angelica for decorating desserts and dende oil for making a few Brazilian dishes. Can you tell me where to obtain them?

A. Candied angelica may be purchased in most fine food shops that specialize in fruitcake ingredients. It may be ordered by mail from Aphrodisia, 28 Carmine Street, New York, N.Y. 10014, and from Lekvar-by-the Barrel, 1577 First Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10028. Both shops will supply catalogues that are well worth obtaining for many odd and hard-to-obtain imported specialties.

Lekvar-by-the-Barrel also sells the dende oil that you desire.

Q. You have often mentioned odd names of curious dishes from Britain and America. How about snickerdoodle?

A. I have tasted a recipe for snickerdoodle that came from Tennessee. Essentially it is a short (which is to say rich) cookie that is flavored with cinnamon. I do not know the origin of the name, but it has been proposed that it is of German origin and derived from the word Schnecken, i.e., Schnecken noodles.

Q. I have a French recipe that calls for using several slices of lard. I find this puzzling and wonder how you go about slicing it. Can you tell me?

A. The word lard in French means bacon, fatback or "streak of lean." Lard gras or fat lard means fatback. Lard maigre means lean pork fat that is salted, smoked and turned into bacon in America. The word for shortening or lard, as it is known in English, is saindoux in French. It is made by rendering pork fat.

You have probably heard of a larding needle. It is so named because you "lard" or thread very lean meat with strips of fat before cooking.

Trial, tribulations not worth beans

PENTICTON (CP) — A 39-cent can of beans has a way of coming back to haunt you, a Calgary man has discovered.

Alan Arthur Reed stole the beans from a supermarket in this Okanagan city four years ago.

He told provincial court here Tuesday that Calgary police recently stopped him in a routine traffic check and informed him that Penticton RCMP had issued a warrant for his arrest after he failed to appear on a charge of theft laid here in June, 1976.

He explained that when he was supposed to appear, he panicked at the idea of being fingerprinted and fled town. Last Saturday, he decided to end the saga by surrendering to Penticton RCMP. The court, which had to rely on Reed's story because the old file could not be located, fined the man $50.

Premier Cable sale hearing starts

VANCOUVER (CP) — Cablevision veteran Sydney Welsh cast himself Tuesday as a weary entrepreneur tossing the flame to a bright, aggressive innovator as hearings opened into a business deal that could create Canada's largest cable company.

Welsh told the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission that he wanted to sell his and his family's 21-per-cent interest in Vancouver-based Premier Cablevision so he can settle his estate and rid himself of debts accumulated over two decades in the business.

And he described Ted Rogers, of Toronto-based Canadian Cablesystems Ltd. (CCL), as just the man to carry off the proposed $88 million deal and give new life to the sagging cablevision industry.

Under the proposal agreed to by the companies but requiring CRTC approval, CCL would acquire 68.6 per cent of Premier's shares, including 26 per cent held now by Western Broadcasting Co. Ltd. and 18.5 per cent owned by U.S.-owned CBS, Inc.

CCL holds 16 per cent of Premier shares and the acquisition would give the Toronto firm an almost 85-per-cent interest.

Welsh told the commission a tale of ever-burgeoning debts in his early years as he tried to expand his infant cablevision business in British Columbia. He then described three previous efforts in the last four years to sell his business, all of which failed.

"Since I can't find a comfortable way to stay in the business, I should get out," said Welsh, who would still be a director of CCL if the deal goes through.

Welsh said he chose to sell out to Ted Rogers, whom he first negotiated with in 1976, because he regarded the Toronto man as the most innovative in Canada.

Under the proposal, CCL and Premier have undertaken to spend $13.5 million over five years on research and development into such cablevision uses as security and medical alert services; spend $5 million on program production; expand the number of cablevision channels in Vancouver to 36 and set up bureaus in legislatures in Victoria and Ottawa so politicians can deliver their messages directly to those interested.

The country will benefit because a significant foreign holding — the shares held by CBS — will be returned to Canada and because there will be creation of new studios and facilities in the West, the proponents argue.

If the bid is approved, the combined companies will serve over one million subscribers, about 28 per cent of the Canadian total.

Much of the day Tuesday was taken up when Andrew Roman, lawyer for the Association for Public Broadcasting in B.C., and Hershel Hardin of Capital Cable Co-operative challenged the authority of the CRTC to make judgment on the transfer of shares.

The CRTC denied their motions.

Transpo deficit projected at $12M

VANCOUVER (CP) — Two preliminary studies released Tuesday project that Transpo '86, the international transportation exhibition for which Vancouver is bidding, will have a deficit of about $12 million while attracting about 13 million people.

However, Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe, who released the reports, said the exhibition would be good business for British Columbia.

Projected capital costs for the exhibition are $75 million and for operating expenditures $74.7 million, for a total of $149.7 million, said Wolfe, who is also chairman of the Committee for Transpo '86.

Revenue from such sources as exhibitor's fees and visitor admissions is projected at $137.8 million, a shortfall of almost $12 million.

Wolfe said the projected revenue does not include other revenue opportunities for such items as the sale of Transpo '86 stamps and coins and indirect benefits such as visitor spending off the exposition site or new service and construction jobs.

He also noted that Expo' 67 drew more than 51 million visitors to Montreal after preliminary projections called for an attendance of about 16 million.

Wolfe said the committee will proceed with comprehensive economic impact studies to identify all the direct and indirect benefits to result from the exposition.

The release of the preliminary studies follows the recent visit to Vancouver of the three-member pre-inquiry team from the Paris-based Bureau of International Exhibitions, the 37-nation body which sanctions world's fairs.

Court orders licence review

VANCOUVER (CP) — City council was told Tuesday by B.C. Supreme Court Justice A. B. Macfarlane to take another look at its refusal to grant a member of Unification Church a pedlar's licence.

The issues should be reconsidered on non-religious grounds, the judge said.

Jorg Heller took his case to Supreme Court when city council turned down his application for permission to sell chocolates, flowers and confectionary door-to-door in Vancouver. He claimed the licence was refused because he is a member of Unification Church, an organization of which he says the city does not approve.

Losing battle over will

VANCOUVER (CP) — The common law wife of Jeffrey David Cohen, the heir to the Army and Navy department store fortune, has lost a pre-trial round Tuesday in her bid to contest his will.

Cohen, 26, died in 1978 apparently from the effects of drugs and in a 1975 will named members of the Cohen family and others as executors.

But Annamarie Krnofuss maintains the will should be ruled invalid on her allegations that undue influence was used on him at a time when he lacked the capacity to make a will.

Rape conviction upheld

OTTAWA (CP) — The Supreme Court of Canada today upheld the rape conviction of Vancouver businessman George Pappajohn.

In a 5-to-2 decision the court said Pappajohn wasn't entitled to the defence that he believed the complainant had consented to the intercourse.

While situations might arise that an accused could use the defence of honest mistake in a rape case, there was no evidence in this case to support it, said the court majority.

Evidence was that Pappajohn and a real estate saleswoman after a long lunch which included a good deal of drinking in August, 1976, went to his home where the rape took place.

Cyclist, 80, breaks record

HALIFAX (CP) — Harry Crawshaw cycled 73 hours straight across the Prairies before blowing a tire. The 80-year-old then took two hours rest and hopped back on his bicycle.

Crawshaw's determination paid off. He arrived here Tuesday after 15 days on the road, shaving four days off the coast-to-coast record by a 23-year-old.

The retired businessman and Salvation Army officer, a Vancouver resident, said Tuesday he plans to rest for a few days and then jog back home to raise money for the Canadian Cancer Society.

Crawshaw, who cycled across Canada and back in five weeks in 1976 earning a place in the Guinness Book of World Records, said he loves a challenge.

He said he arrived here ahead of schedule because of the 73-hour stint on the Prairies.

Crawshaw carried a tent and sleeping bag but said it was too cold to sleep so he kept on going.

He said he cycled an average of 480 kilometres a day and is optimistic about jogging back. He said he jogs eight kilometres before breakfast and averages 64 to 80 kilometres a day.

Crash probe raps firm

VANCOUVER (CP) — Canada's chief air safety investigator lashed out Tuesday at de Havilland Aircraft officials for failing to co-operate in inquiries following the 1978 crash of a Twin Otter into Coal Harbor.

Lorne Tapp, of the aviation safety investigation branch, also told a royal commission on air safety that a power struggle within Transport Canada, along with confused bureaucracy, all played a role in delaying Coal Harbor crash inquiries.

The crash of an Airwest Airlines Twin Otter floatplane, which killed 11 persons Sept. 2, 1978, is considered one of the most important cases before the commission, headed by Ontario Appeal Court Judge Charles Dubin. The commission is holding hearings on air safety here for two weeks.

John Sopinka, commission counsel, said the crash highlights fundamental issues relating to accident investigation, including the need for an independent investigation agency.

The Coal Harbor crash, he said, also poses the questions of whether airplane manufacturers should participate directly in investigations or if federal federal investigators should be involved in coroner's inquests.

Tapp told the commission de Havilland wasted time by failing to provide information and trying to prove as incorrect federal findings blaming stress corrosion in the aircraft's flap control rod.

The final federal report, released about 18 months after the crash, conclusively blamed the control rod. Similar corrosion to an aileron control rod was recently blamed for a Twin Otter crash last September at Sechelt, about 50 kilometres northwest of here.

"What really annoyed me about de Havilland was that we invited them down and they agreed that the flap rod had failed," Tapp said. The company decided later to oppose that conclusion and continued to oppose it for a year, said Tapp. During that year the Sechelt crash occurred.

Member of church deprogrammed?

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver members of the Unification Church are demanding a full police investigation into the disappearance of Dilys Hankis, 26, a member of their group.

Police say they're treating the woman's disappearance as a routine missing-person case.

Ms. Hankis was last seen Thursday having lunch with a cousin.

Church members fear she has been kidnapped by deprogrammers who, they say, will use psychological techniques to undermine her faith.

Police say an investigation found no evidence of kidnapping. Staff Sergeant Bob Burns said police are "assuming she just walked away from her friends for a while."

Engineer thought ship not breaking law on high seas

The engineer aboard the freighter Samarkanda, loaded with 33.5 tons of cannabis, told a county court jury Tuesday he didn't think there was a violation of any country's laws as long as the ship remained on the high seas.

William Terry Hines, 39, of San Rafael, Calif., who used to work as a maintenance mechanic for San Francisco Bay ferries, said he thought the risks were minimal after being recruited.He said he was to be paid $100,000.

He was to continue testimony today when he was expected to tell of mechanical problems experienced by the Samarkanda while at sea following the airlift of cannabis off the coast of Colombia in April, 1979.

Hines and seven other men are accused of importing cannabis marijuana and possession of marijuana for the purpose of trafficking.

Hines outlined his background and work experience in suburban San Francisco. He became close friends with the father of fellow defendant William Francis Perka, 35, of Port Townsend, Wash., and worked with him and Perkafor a time.

At the end of 1974, he accompanied Perka to Mazatlan, Mexico, and assisted in engine repairs to the Samarkanda. They sailed on her while she picked up a cargo of spare parts on the Atlantic coast of Colombia.

They returned to the United States in late May or early June, 1975, and two years later he helped Perka move to Port Townsend.

At the end of 1978 or early 1979, he said, Perka visited him while he was working for San Francisco Bay ferries. He was told that Perka had some people who were interested in buying a boat and a little later was told the new owner of the Samarkanda had a job to transport a load of cannabis from a point off Colombia to a point off the northwest United States on the high seas. There was no mention of Canada, he said.

In February, 1979, he said he first met fellow defendants Jaime Marin, 38, of Marina del Rey, Calif., Paul Oscar Nelson, 27, of Seattle and Marina del Rey, and Marco Antonio Lopera Penagos, 60, of Mellin, Colombia, and they looked over a boat in a shipyard in Richmond, Calif.

At the end of February, he travelled to Salina Cruz, Mexico, to inspect the Samarkanda. She appeared in good condition. He sailed aboard her about six days later for Tumaco, Colombia.

Hines said there were minor problems on that voyage but he considered them routine and was not worried. He changed the fuel filters once.

After they left Tumaco for the aircraft drop zone, they spent about 20 days at sea when he had expected only a few days before the voyage north started. The fuel filters had to be changed again and that was when he first thought there may be a problem.

"I knew we had a serious contamination problem; we had quite dirty fuel," he said. Both Colombia and Mexico were notorious for dirty fuel. But the vessel carried enough filters for 10 or 12 changes.

Hines said the Samarkanda had two main diesel engines producing 900 horsepower each which drove generators turning the electric motors. Through a reduction gear which he compared with the differential and rear axle of a car, the motors turned the propeller. There were also two auxiliary engines and generators.

Robbery, violence net pair two years

Two men were sentenced in county court Tuesday to two years less a day in jail after being convicted of two counts of robbery with violence and being unlawfully in a house.

Barry Wayne Andrew, 28, and Rodney Ernest Bryant, 19, were found guilty by Judge E.J.C. Stewart of robbing Marjorie Brown, 71, of $25 and her sister, Betty Newman, 67, of $50.

The sisters identified the men in court as the two who came to their Prior Street home Feb. 15 seeking to use the bathroom. Brown said her wrist was grabbed and money demanded. She was more angered than frightened.

Before the judge

Judge Harold Alder wanted to know if a vacationing Quebecer who was found May 13 in a downtown beer parlor with 120 capsules of LSD ever used the restricted drug himself.

"A couple of times, yes," said Ron Laplante, 23, who pleaded guilty in provincial court Tuesday to a charge of possession of a restricted drug for trafficking.

Alder wanted to know if the man knew what the drug did "to people, society".

The man said that he did which prompted Alder to add,"you don't care?"

"Sure, I care," said Laplante.

Then why sell it, asked Alder.

"To make money," he was told.

The court had earlier been told that Laplante planned to sell the capsules for $3.50 each on the street.

Alder sentenced the man to three months in jail.

Court was told that a 43-year-old Sooke man was despondent over job prospects and the family's finances the day he was found impaired behind the wheel April 16 in Tahsis. He had a blood-alcohol reading of .33.

A few weeks later he was charged with same offence in Sooke.

Thomas McGuchie of 114-6649 Sooke pleaded guilty to both charges and was sentenced to 14 days in prison concurrent on both counts.

He declined an opportunity to serve the time on successive weekends.

Other drinking and driving related convictions include; Mark Blatchford, 20, of 3497 Aloha, $400; Lawrence A. Hill, 39, of West Coast Road, $400; James Harris, 20, of CFB Esquimalt, $400; Edward Nicholas, 21, of 19C Cook, $500.

Fined for drinking-driving convictions were William Thomas Howie, 23, of 1736 Christmas, $500; Kirk Allan Peterson, 20, of 2587 Selwyn, $400; and Robert John Dyer, 19, of 1580 Beach Drive, $100.

Conviction 'grossly unfair'

VANCOUVER (CP) — B.C. Court of Appeal judges were told Tuesday that conviction of a television station and a reporter for criminal contempt of court was grossly unfair.

The judges reserved decision on an appeal conducted by lawyer Ernie Alexander for British Columbia Television and reporter Russ Froese, who were fined $500 each following conviction by B.C. Supreme Court Chief Justice Allan McEachern.

The station and Froese were convicted of criminal contempt in connection with comments made prior to the opening of the trial in October, 1978, of William Faulder Robertson and eight others accused of conspiracy to traffic in cocaine.

In court Tuesday, Alexander agreed that the broadcast violated the rules of reporting of criminal trials but he said the Crown proceeded summarily in deferring the case for eight months until after the trial.

Federal gas export tax proposal not received, says McClelland

Energy Minister Bob McClelland said Tuesday British Columbia has not received any specific proposals regarding a federal export tax on natural gas, despite an Ottawa news report to the contrary.

Federal Energy Minister Marc Lalonde is quoted as saying the federal government has already made a formal proposal for a gas export tax, designed to raise $10 billion for the federal treasury over the next four years.

"I'm surprised at the story which seems to indicate Mr. Lalonde has made some specific proposals to both Alberta and British Columbia," McClelland said.

"So far as I know he hasn't made those proposals to Alberta, not in specific. And he certainly hasn't made them to British Columbia."

McClelland said British Columbia has consistently opposed an export tax on our natural gas and will continue to do so.

Unfortunately, the minister said, Ottawa regards Alberta and B.C. resources as a means of reducing the federal deficit.

He said the federal government is playing a trading game, trying to swap concessions on such things as northeast coal or a Vancouver Island gas pipeline for the right to tax our natural gas.

"We're not going to be suckered into that kind of a deal," McClelland said. "There may be some moves to get us into that sort of position but we're going to resist it."

He also said the province will resist the temptation to start rattling sabres and lashing out at Ottawa politicians. For now, he said, he's giving them the benefit of the doubt.

Further federal-provincial negotiations on the issue open in a couple of weeks.

Meanwhile, Industry Minister Don Phillips is refusing to discuss the continuing negotiations with Ottawa over development of B.C.'s northeast coal, other than to say a coal deal with the Japanese is still "very close."

NDP poses questions

After 57¼ hours of debate spread over 21 legislative sittings, the NDP opposition finally permitted Premier Bill Bennett's ministerial estimates to pass.

The house voted 29-23 Tuesday to approve the $551,612 appropriation but not before the opposition squeezed the last bit of political juice out of the situation.

NDP House Leader Frank Howard gave notice of a motion expressing non-confidence in Bennett for his failure to answer key questions during the marathon debate on his estimates.

The motion lists 24 separate questions left unanswered.

Ordinarily, the opposition's non-confidence motion would consist of an attempt to reduce the premier's salary to $1. However, such a motion is dealt with during the estimates debate. The new tactic is designed to keep the pressure on Bennett all session long.

Only the government can call the non-confidence motion for debate and Howard said, "I hope the premier has the guts to call it."

Otherwise, he said, "it will hang as a cloud over them for the balance of the session, a constant reminder of the premier's refusal to come clean about the goings-on in the backroom of his office."

Many of the 24 questions listed in the NDP motion deal with the Lettergate-Dirty Tricks affair and allegations of secret Socred party funds being administered from the premier's office.

Others deal with the part played by Bennett in setting up the Victoria-Seattle jetfoil service, the issue of whether he tried to peddle B.C. uranium abroad and the general question of the public's right to know what happens in the premier's office.

Howard said the premier's consistent refusal to answer these and other questions is an insult to the legislature and to the people of B.C.

Doctors fed up with low pay rise

The serious under-funding of medicare in B.C. will be a major issue when the B.C. Medical Association holds its annual meeting May 30-31 at the Four Seasons Hotel in Vancouver.

"Our members are fed up and we are ready to take a hard-line stand when we start negotiations with the government," says BCMA president Dr. Mel Petreman of Nanaimo.

Priority will be given the negotiating committee's report, one of 69 to be delivered at the meeting. The report will precede bargaining sessions between the government and the 4,600-member association.

"The size of the recent awards to the nursing profession is a good indication of how badly our health care system has been squeezed," Petreman says. "We have not kept up with the rest of society and our patience with inadequate fee increases has been exhausted."

Other major reports will be presented by the environmental health committee, emergency medical services committee and the nutrition committee.

Key speakers at the convention will include Health Minister Rafe Mair and Dr. D.L. Wilson of Kingston, Ont., president of the Canadian Medical Association.

UVic hosts conference for blind

The B.C. and Yukon division of the Canadian Council of the Blind will hold its annual conference at the University of Victoria starting Saturday.

The three-day conference includes an address by Consumer Affairs Minister James Nielsen.

Nielsen has been asked to answer a number of questions on provincial policy relating to the handicapped.

The conference, which will be held in the student union building, also includes training in community development, public relations, police and activism.

In a letter to Nielsen, council spokesman Del Graham describes the CCB as a consumer advocacy organization composed of blind Canadians.

Its number one priority is the inclusion of all handicapped people in the Human Rights Codes of B.C and Canada.

More programs for handicapped, including province-wide employment in the provincial public service, is another goal.

"I feel it only fair to advise you in advance, Mr. Nielsen, that handicapped people across Canada and in B.C. are watching the provincial government closely to see what programs are developing, especially during 1981," the letter states.

Socred paper with new name

By JAKE BANKY

The B.C. Social Credit Party newspaper, Unity News, has been replaced by a new publication called — at least temporarily — Socred News.

In the first issue, now being circulated, editor Dean V. Tkatschow says party members will be given a chance to say whether they like the name and propose alternatives if it is unacceptable.

In a message to readers marking the first issue, Premier Bill Bennett states:

"Our party recently went through a difficult time. A few overzealous and misguided individuals tarnished us and, in some cases, made us uncertain about ourselves and about the way we do things.

"I am happy to say that is now behind us. That does not mean it is forgotten. I hope it is never forgotten because those who don't learn from mistakes may repeat them."

The premier adds: "I believe that as a result of these difficulties we have emerged a stronger party, surer of ourselves and rededicated to the ideal that only the highest standards are acceptable in politics."

Bennett's reference was to the party's recent bout with the Lettergate-Dirty Tricks affair.

On another page, however, Health Minister Rafe Mair calls on fellow Socreds not to over-react to the criticism of the past months.

While staying within the boundaries of fair play, he says, party members should feel free to support the government through letters to the editor and hot-line shows whenever they are so inclined.

The 20-page tabloid also features a message from party president Bernie Smith, who writes:

"While we are bounding into the '80s with new programs, with new vigor and enthusiasm, it is difficult to contain oneself.

"How exciting it will be to see the day our seeds blossom and bear fruit. How proud we will all be to say, 'I am a Socred.' "

An article by C.J. Clayton complains of "often slanderous and libellous statements that emanate from newspapers, radio and TV."

On the same page, the party's executive director, Hugh Garris, writes that on the whole the news media tries to be impartial in its reporting.

Another item reveals that last February, Consumer Affairs Minister Jim Nielsen wrote a letter to every major newspaper in the United States.

It was at the time of the U.S. love affair with Canada over the part played by Canadian embassy staff in getting six Americans out of Iran.

Nielsen's letter told the Americans: "I am somewhat surprised at this outpouring of appreciation. I have always held the belief that Canada and Canadians would always, at any time, in any circumstances, stand by our American brothers."

The letter ends with the invitation, "Don't be shy. Get up here to visit and say hello."

According to the report in Socred News, almost every U.S. newspaper that received the letter printed it and Nielsen has been deluged with thankful replies from all over the United States.

There is only one letter to the editor in the first issue. It comes from the Socred MLA for Vancouver South, Peter Hyndman, and calls on Socreds to familiarize themselves with the 1969 Waffle Manifesto of the NDP.

"The NDP now are doing their best to sweep the Manifesto away under the rug of history in an effort to have it forgotten." This should not be allowed to happen, says Hyndman.

"I urge all our readers to re-acquaint themselves with the Waffle Manifesto and the dangers it poses for all citizens of British Columbia.

"Then, re-acquaint your friends and the public with the Manifesto and make it clear that the NDP is the party of the Waffle Manifesto."

The Socred News will be published four times a year.

UVic high volume ratio

University of Victoria spent far less last year on books than it did for library staff but still has more books per student than Canada's other 27 university libraries.

The board of governors received statistics Tuesday showing UVic's McPherson library has 1.9 million volumes, equally divided between books and microfilmed material, for an average 305.6 volumes per student.

The only other university library in Canada approaching that ratio is New Brunswick with 254.7 books per student.

Rallies planned to protest pension changes

B.C. public sector unions will hold a series of rallies to focus attention on their dissatisfaction with proposed changes to pension legislation.

The decision to stage the demonstrations arose from a meeting Tuesday of the public sector committee of the B.C. Federation of Labor.

Details of the rallies will be hammered out at another meeting Thursday.

"The purpose will be to try and convince the government that there are enough people, public service people, vitally concerned about the pensions," Robbie Robinson, spokesman for the B.C. Government Employees Union, said today.

He said the rally also is intended to pressure the government to either withdraw the legislation or at least revamp some of the bill.

Union secretary John Fryer said last Friday after a meeting with Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe that the union was not ruling out job action in order to put its point across.

However, no mention of job action emerged from Tuesday's meeting.

The effect of the pension legislation would be to increase mandatory employee contributions to public service and teachers' pension plans while putting a ceiling on the amount of indexing permitted.

Speaking of the B.C. government employees' plan, Robinson said it is in good shape with the lowest unfunded liability of any such public sector plan in the country.

With proper investment any threat to the plan could be avoided, he said, adding that the BCGEU wants a separate committment from the government because it doesn't feel its plan is in financial danger.

Meanwhile, about 3,200 B.C. Hydro employees who drive and maintain bus service in Victoria and Vancouver will also be affected by the pension legislation.

As a result of the transfer of transit service from Hydro to the Urban Transit Authority, the employees will be forced to give up their own pension plan and pick up the Municipal Pension Plan.

Those affected are members of the Amalgamated Transit Union and the Office and Technical Employees Union.

Preston Storey, secretary of the ATU's Victoria local, said today the union was concerned at first but has now been told the new plan will be at least as good as the existing one with Hydro.

However, the employees' current plan includes a cost-of-living indexing system and there is some concern about what effect the government's new proposal will have on that benefit, Storey said.

Any details about the transfer and how it will affect the employees will likely be provided at a meeting Friday with government and transit authority officials, he added.

Carr house gets lift

Stay calm, residents of James Bay. They're not going to take Emily Carr's old house away — it just looks like it.

A firm of house movers moved onto the property of the 120-year-old heritage building at 207 Government this morning.

Employees of Nickel Bros. House Movers of Nanaimo were tossing off railroad tie-sized timbers used in jacking up buildings.

Two signs on the boarded over windows advertise the services of the house moving firm, and the heavy equipment in the front yard suggests the Carr home built by Emily's father in 1863 will disappear from the corner of Government and Simcoe.

But it isn't true.

The house is going to be moved, but only straight up a few feet so experts can check the condition of supporting timbers. The house has no modern foundation and rests on a series of brick piers.

Russell Irvine, director of the provincial Heritage Conservation Branch, said today it's the first phase of a restoration program for the "House of Small" where B.C.'s best known artist was born in 1871.

"It's very wet and we may find a lot of rot," he said, adding that insects may also be a problem.

The house has been closed for several weeks and the children's art classes ended earlier this spring.

UVic board increase tuition fee smallest possible with inflation

By AB KENT

A 1980-81 tuition fee increase amounting to $3 per full-time course breezed through a University of Victoria board of governors' meeting Tuesday with only two opposing votes — both from student members.

President Howard Petch said the 7.69 per cent hike — which increases fees for full-time undergraduates by $45 to a maximum of $630 — represents the smallest increase which could be considered in view of operating costs.

It is not enough, Petch said, to keep abreast of the cost of running UVic.

The president said he is conscious of the difficulties faced by many students — especially those from out of town — in meeting the cost of attending university.

And Petch also said he is aware that promised improvements in the federal-provincial student aid program have not occurred.

But to alleviate this to some degree, he said he will recommend next month that a 50 per cent boost be given in bursary and other financial aid for undergraduate and graduate students.

Governors also raised other revenue provisions — fees for law students are up by $45 to $713; first- and second-year MA and PhD courses by $47 to $658; parttime students by $6 per unit to $84 to a maximum $658; auditor's, course challenge, supplemental exam, document evaluation and transcript fees are up by varying amounts.

Part-time students in past have paid nearly double the cost of full-time attendance. Now, part-time tuition will be no higher than the cost of a regular degree.

Petch introduced a more lenient system of service charges and late payment fees for most students.

This year students were assessed $38,500 by means of a 10 per cent charge on unpaid fees.

If accounts are met at the same rate in the coming session, the fines would drop to $21,500.

Petch said this will be easier on students who are marginally late, but students who are persistently delinquent will pay more.

Petch said the new fees are a compromise between what the university really needs and what students can afford.

Student representative Brian Klaver said he expects the higher fees will result in dropouts.

Fees can't be viewed in isolation from other costs students face, he said.

Text books, for example, have risen dramatically, and living costs are high.

Students need more job opportunities enabling them to save money for education, and the student loan system needs to be opened up, he said.

Compared with other western universities, the UVic fee hike is typical: Simon Fraser went up $45 (8.3 per cent) but the total is still only $585; UBC rose 10 per cent ($54) to $590; Alberta universities rose 10 per cent ($55) to $605; Saskatchewan by 5.3 per cent ($35) to $690; Manitoba by 8 per cent ($45) to $615.

Woodwards' food workers may strike

Employees in the food department at Woodwards' Mayfair mall store are now in a legal strike position following the breakdown of talks last week.

The 150 members of the Retail Clerks' Union, Local 1518, served 72-hour strike notice about two weeks ago.

Mediator Ken Albertini' efforts to resolve the dispute came to an end last Thursday. He has withdrawn.

New 'down-under' phone link planned

A new submarine telephone cable linking Canada with Hawaii, Australia and New Zealand will be connected at Port Alberni, Teleglobe Canada has announced.

The $300 million project will begin immediately.

The cable will carry more than 1,000 telephone circuits and will replace the existing cable which carries only 80 circuits.

The new cable reflects the increasing demand for Pacific Rim communications, a Teleglobe spokesman said in Montreal today.

Costs will be shared by all the countries using the cable.

Port Alberni already has a Teleglobe office and small staff supervising the present cable.

No staff increase is anticipated but the new line will bring long-term job security for Teleglobe personnel at Port Alberni.

VIA is neglecting pledges: Cooper

VIA Rail is failing to live up to commitments made in 1978 to improve passenger service on the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway, Ald. John Cooper said Tuesday.

He told city council's central business district advisory committee that two years ago the federal agency promised to conduct an extensive study on ways of linking the E & N with other forms of transport on Vancouver Island.

It also promised to relocate the existing terminal on Esquimalt Road closer to downtown Victoria, but nothing has been done on either pledged, Cooper said.

Cooper, whose E & N steering committee helped save the dayliner two years ago, told the committee he feared the service faced a new danger in the form of neglect by VIA.

In a proposal endorsed by the committee, former Victoria mayor Mike Young suggested that the provincial government's Urban Transit Authority study a takeover of the E & N Railway's passenger service.

Young said the dayliner which provides daily passenger service between Victoria and Courtenay should be viewed as "a people mover for the next century."

The UTA would be the logical agency to assume control of the E & N, if Vancouver Island communities now served by the railway approve of the switch.

He said VIA Rail, the federal body now in charge of railway passenger service, should continue to pick up its deficits for the first decade.

Cooper said the distance of the present station from downtown deters tourists and others who would use the E & N.

"We've got to take the lead if we want changes made. It's obvious we can't leave it to VIA."

Local communities on the Island ought to act as a pressure group to force VIA to live up to its commitments, Cooper said.

Chamber of Commerce president Cedric Steele told the committee that the E & N should be more aggressive in soliciting freight.

"The E & N is the basic heart of our transportation system on the Island. It should be promoted both for passengers and freight," Steele said.

$3 rummage buy turns up roses

LONDON (AP) — A small ivory mirror case bought at a rummage sale for $3 and kept in a drawer for 20 years was sold at a London auction for a record price of $82,800. The four-inch case with a hunting scene carving was identified as being of 14th-century French origin.

Development on reserve to start soon

The first phase of the long-term development plan for the Songhees reserve in Victoria West could get under way soon as city and provincial government officials meet within a month to discuss servicing the land.

Mayor Bill Tindall told the central business district advisory committee that by the end of 1980 there could be a substantial start on the plan, which calls for a mix of hotel, apartments and other multiple dwellings plus open space which could house up to 2,700 people.

Now it is mostly vacant industrial land, owned by the provincial government and leased out on a long-term basis.

The mayor said the first priority would be construction of a trunk sewer line from Catherine Street to the Johnson Street bridge.

City planner Geoff Greenhalgh said the realignment of Esquimalt Road to run parallel with the E & N tracks would be the next step.

Victoria's city planning department and the Advisory Planning Commission came up with the plan recently in response to notification from the B.C. government that it intended to sell most of the land it owns in the Songhees reserve.

The first private development in the area — which used to be the home of the Songhees Indians until they sold the property and moved to View Royal before the First World War — could be Henry Eng's hotel project.

He is currently negotiating with the Provincial Capital Commission for a lease on the old Sidney Roofing property between Songhees Point and the bridge.

LOOKING FOR THAT GOLDEN OPPORTUNITY?

If you've ever dreamed of being your own boss, owning your own business or getting a new start in life—we're interested in meeting you. We're a major marketing organization expanding into Western Canada with a nationally known product that had over $66 Million in sales last year. We will consider part-time distributors initially, but you must be expansion minded with a desire to develop it into a full-time business. Our Company provides you with prime retail locations, then you take over and restock, collect the money and keep your records up to date. A complete training program is provided by us. You do not need previous experience. No need to quit your regular job until you are a proven success in our business. Our product is backed by national advertising on TV, radio, magazines and newspapers. Automatic merchandising is the answer and we are successful in every phase of the business. We offer:

- NO SELLING
- HONEST PROFITS
- NO EXPERIENCE
- SHORT HOURS

We are interested in honest, hard-working individuals, looking for a career, who can start immediately and have available a minimum cash investment of $3,800.00 which is completely secured by product and inventory. Earnings can grow to $1,200.00 per month and much more depending on your investment of your time and effort. If you can give this program 5 to 10 hours per week to start, have a reliable car and meet the investment requirements, you could make your dream come true. Interested? Write today. Your first letter must contain a complete work history including personal and credit references and telephone number.

'The Force' is back to guide Luke Skywalker again

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — "The Force" is with us again.

Starting today in 126 theatres in North America, Darth Vader breathes down the neck of the rebel alliance; Chewbacca growls at danger; and Luke Skywalker lets "The Force" — a strange, mystical power — guide him.

The Empire Strikes Back — the sequel to the most successful film in history, Star Wars — blends old and new elements in its story.

To begin with, producer-creator George Lucas has subtitled the movie Episode V and says there will be seven other Star Wars films. In addition, a Muppet plays a central role and the soldier-of-fortune Han Solo gains a larger part, one that includes some romance with the Princess Leia.

What is the same is the avalanche of special effects and national attention.

In Hollywood, fans camped outside a theatre for 36 hours to see the initial showing of the sequel.

One of those standing in the drizzle outside the Egyptian Theatre, Terri Hardin, said the 36-hour encampment was not nearly as difficult as the three-year hiatus between films.

"We're waiting for our high. It's in that door. You know, we don't want anything else. We don't need anything else," said Miss Hardin.

"The Force is with us and it's going to carry us right on into that theatre," she said.

Miss Hardin had been firmly entrenched on Hollywood Boulevard with 12 or 13 other fans since early Monday, even though tickets — priced at a record $5.50 each — didn't go on sale until 11 p.m. Tuesday. The screenings began at 12:01 a.m. today and continue for an unprecedented 72 hours, said Egyptian Theater executive Roy Evans.

It's that kind of fanatical devotion that enabled Star Wars to earn $300 million in box office receipts since it was released in May 1977. And 20th Century-Fox officials feel that kind of force portends success for the sequel.

"The contracts we have with theatres in the domestic (U.S.) market cannot return to us less than $30 million," said Peter Myers, senior vice president domestic distribution for 20th Century-Fox. He said the film cost about $25 million to make, excluding marketing costs.

That, in Myers' view, makes The Empire Strikes Back about as close to a sure thing as anyone could ever get in the unpredictable film business.

One of the elements likely to make its mark on popular culture like The Force already has is a two-foot Muppet called Yoda.

Yoda is the 800-year-old teacher who instructs Skywalker in the use of "The Force," as did the venerable Ben Kenobi — played by Alec Guinness — in Star Wars.

The Shadow's voice dies

MISSION, Kan. (AP) — Grayson Maynard Enlow, the voice of The Shadow on network radio during the late 1940s and early 1950s, has died at age 63.

Enlow, who died Sunday, was a Broadway actor and radio announcer for more than 40 years.

His Broadway credits included My Sister Eileen, Of Thee I Sing, Time of Your Life and The Big People.

Born in Lamar, Colo., Enlow was in the U.S. Army Air Corps in the Second World War and lived in Leavenworth, Kan., and New York before moving to the Kansas City area in 1960.

He landed the job as the Shadow's voice after he went to New York to make his name in radio. He was one of about 10 Shadows, the most notable being Orson Welles.

The Shadow was Lamont Cranston, a wealthy young man-about-town whose mind-reading powers challenged some of radio's biggest villains. The radio drama went off the air in 1952.

Enlow retired from radio in 1971 after fast-talking disc jockeys and automated radio formats began to dominate the industry.

Virgin sprung

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — Police raided a group of treasure hunters who — on the advise of a sorcerer — planned to sacrifice an 18-year-old virgin to appease the gods just as the ceremony was to begin. The girl was unharmed.

The bidding:

Opening lead — king of clubs.

Assume you're declarer at four spades and West leads the king of clubs. You win with the ace, cash the A-K of spades, and play the diamond ten, losing the finesse to East's jack.

East returns the eight of hearts and, when you follow low, West's nine forces dummy's queen. You now play a trump to your hand and lead the nine of diamonds, finessing again. East wins with the king and delivers the killing blow by returning the deuce of hearts. So the outcome is that you lose two heart tricks and go down one.

You were unlucky, of course. After all, West was the defender who entered the bidding and he should have had either the king or jack of diamonds. But if you're a perfectionist by nature, and later analyze your play objectively, you discover that you misplayed the hand. It wasn't just bad luck that beat you; there was a sure-fire way to make the contract, and it was not really difficult.

At trick five, when East led the eight of hearts, you should have played your king instead of following low. This would have forced West to take his ace and the contract would then have come home regardless of what he returned or where the king of diamonds was located.

Thus, suppose West returned the jack of hearts. You'd win with the queen, ruff a club, and try another diamond finesse. True, this finesse would also lose, but that would mark the end of the play. East would not have a heart to return — he could not really have more than two hearts, considering West's heart overcall in the two level — and when he returned a club, you would ruff it and dispose of your heart loser on dummy's fourth diamond.

Rockfall kills 9

VICUNA, Chile (Reuter) — Nine workers were killed Friday by a rockfall in El Indio copper mine, 608 kilometres northwest of the capital of Santiago, police reported.

FUN WITH FIGURES

By J.A.H. HUNTER

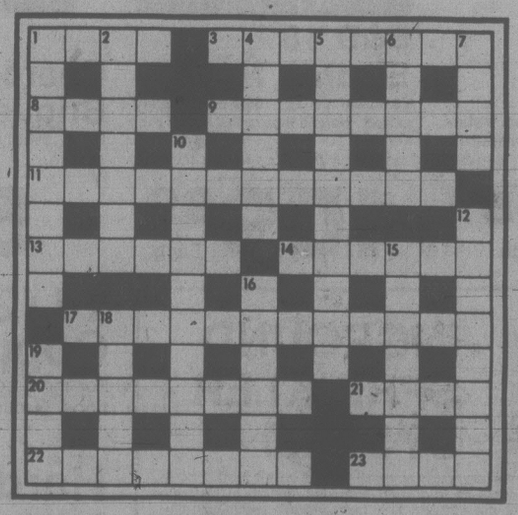

Steve pointed across the street. "You say there's always something special about any number. What about that one?"

Harry looked. "You chose a good example," he replied. "There are several things special about it. For example, it happens to be exactly one third the square of its middle pair of digits."

What was the number?

(Answer tomorrow)

Yesterday's answer: KOOK was 1001.

21 HELP WANTED GENERAL

GROUP HOME STAFF NEEDED

Experienced mature staff (couples or individuals) are needed to operate an independant group home on a contractual basis for up to six retarded teenagers. These youngsters currently live in community or institutional settings and attend community schools. They need the warmth and security of caring parent figures. They also need the structure and guidance necessary to develop personal life skills and appropriate social behaviours to enable them to function in the community. Since seizures and hyperactivity can be problems staff should be prepared to deal with these. Staff should be familiar and comfortable with a variety of behaviour management techniques. They would be expected to work closely and effectively with the Ministry of Human Resources, other community resources and, with the social workers help, the parents, in meeting the needs of these children. Some bookkeeping experience would also be useful. Please send resume including relevant experiences and references by May 31th to Doug Matheson, Ministry of Human Resources, 1627 Fort St., Victoria, B.C., V8R 1H8. Phone 598-5121.

Mill arson suspected

LAKE COWICHAN — Arson is suspected in last Friday's fire which destroyed the central mill area of Island Shake and Shingle Ltd., Sgt. Ken Douglas of Lake Cowichan RCMP said Tuesday.

Nanaimo fire marshal Ed Taylor amd constables Ken Handyn of Duncan and Ken Yaeger of Lake Cowichan are investigating.

There were no injuries but the fire caused extensive damage to the mill, which had gone into receivership four days earlier.

These flowers like warmth

gardening
hilda beastall

First-year gardeners here from warmer (summer) parts of Canada cannot know that certain colorful flowering annuals will normally fail to make a display in Victoria gardens.

Amaranthus, kochia (burning-bush or Summer-cypress) and celosia (Cockscomb or Crests) are only possible under artfully-contrived conditions.

All three are semi-tropical, needing either a quick start outdoors at the beginning of June in an eastern hot summer, or a greenhouse sowing in late April followed by growing in separate containers to avoid transplanting shock when going into the garden.

Even now it is not too late to sow a few seeds in a greenhouse. Soil temperature for celosia and amaranthus should be between 21 and 27 degrees celsius night and day.

Kochia gets along with a 16 degree soil temperature. These high temperatures are needed only for the period of germination, not for growing.

Fine sand with about 25 per cent fine screened soil is the seed growing medium. Watering must be carefully done, air and light given freely without draft, chill, or sunscorch after germination.

Celosia and kochia show through the soil in about two weeks; amaranthus takes about three weeks.

Of the three, kochia is probably the easiest to handle here outdoors; occasionally a group of the plants is seen in gardens. Prick out the seedlings into small pots as soon as they can be handled and get them planted in the garden by mid-June from a sowing made this weekend.

Kochia looks good in planters, tubs and patio squares. Give them well-drained sandy soil and sunshine outdoors, and moderate watering. This means a thorough soaking occasionally.

Amaranthus and celosia need warmer conditions all through and also resent root disturbance. At the same time neither survives scorching dry heat.

After germination, prick out as soon as possible in a sandy fine humus (very old screened manure and soil), each seedling into a separate container.

Grow them in a sunny, warm but airy greenhouse until about the end of June when outdoor soil should be warm enough for their liking.

Choose sheltered spots in the garden or on sundecks for these plants. They are ideal for suntraps which have a little shade for part of the summer days.

Even with only July and August as summer months after the plants are put out, they become hardier by that time and, surprisingly, remain as a good color display through September.

Dwarf forms of celosia and amaranthus are the best buy at this time if you're looking for seed. The seed is good for about three years.

Kochia seed does not retain germinating strength beyond two years.

Give these old favorites a trial here if you feel you have the warm growing conditions to make them a success.

Answer to yesterday's puzzle.

Carter orders move in gene-panic wake

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter today declared a federal emergency to permit government authorities to relocate temporarily more than 700 families now living in the chemical-contaminated Love Canal area of Niagara Falls, N.Y.

Government officials said Carter made the relocation decision because of various health studies that suggest "significant health risks" to families living around an abandoned chemical dump site.

"Ordinarily we would not subject the public and affected families to the disruption of temporary relocation unless conclusion on adverse health effects had been fully documented and confirmed," Barbara Blum, deputy administrator of the federal Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), told reporters.

"But this is not an ordinary situation. This case presents special circumstances warranting this extraordinary action. The studies completed today are so suggestive of a threat to public health that prudence dictates the residents be relocated while definitive studies are being completed."

The federal and New York state governments will share the cost.

The federal government was spurred into action following the weekend release of a study done for the EPA that found chromosome abnormalities in 11 of 36 area residents tested.

Earlier today, New York Gov. Hugh Carey asked Carter for the emergency declaration and sought federal funds to buy the more than 700 homes involved and pay for permanent relocation of the families.

However, Carter's actions will only provide rent-free housing for up to a year. Officials said that is the maximum assistance available under existing federal law.

Blum said the temporary relocation will last until long-range health studies on the residents are completed within the next few months.

There was no immediate estimate on how much the temporary relocation will cost the governments, but earlier Blum said the figure could run between $3 million and $5 million. Carey has said permanent relocation would cost between $30 million and $60 million.

Officials of the Federal Emergency Management Agency and the New York transportation department are already in Niagara Falls to begin assisting the families' move to temporary housing.

The events were preceded by a statement from Richard J. Arcara, the regional U.S. attorney, that he was still investigating the homeowners' locking two Environmental Protection Agency officials in an office for more than five hours Monday. His decision to file charges might depend on future conduct of the homeowners, Arcara said.

In his telegram to Carter, the governor said the families are "experiencing serious concern and tension as to their current and future health" following the weekend release of an EPA study showing chromosomal abnormalities in 11 of 36 area residents tested.

Noting that the state had already spent $40 million on purchase of 239 homes and cleaning up the former dumpsite, he said the situation in the Love Canal neighborhood "is beyond the capabilities of state and local governments."

But Carey's request came amid mounting uncertainty over the chromosomal damage study.

An escape from inferno

VANCOUVER (CP) — Paul and Cathie Hickson saw more than they bargained for at the base of Mount St. Helens.

The young Richmond couple went to the mountain out of scientific curiosity but wound up running for their lives when the volcano erupted violently Sunday morning.

Paul, 30, a post-doctoral fellow in astrophysics at the University of B.C. and Cathie, 25, an undergraduate geology student, camped 14 kilometres from the volcano and could see through their telescope that the side of the mountain was visibly distended, producing the bulge that worried scientists.

"We were sitting in the front seat of our car quietly eating breakfast," Mrs. Hickson said today.

"But while we were eating, Paul shouted, 'Look!' and when I looked up the bulge was half-way down the mountain. He ran out to take some photos, but after a matter of a few seconds the whole side of the mountain was a billowing mass of black cloud and steam, like a mushroom-type atomic bomb cloud.

"That's when we decided we shouldn't stick around. We had thought that this deep river valley in front of us would protect us, but it was obvious that nothing could stop that cloud."

The Hicksons shoved their dogs into the car and careered onto a logging road leading south, away from the volcano. However, the road turned north on another ridge, taking them back toward the danger and the ominous black cloud which covered the sky.

Cathie and Paul Hickson washing off volcanic ash

"Then it started to rain, but it was mud and soon we had a layer of mud on our windshield," said Mrs. Hickson. "On that very narrow logging road, we were afraid of running off the road."

"The road was closed," Mrs. Hickson said. "But we just opened the gate and drove in. I didn't want to go this way. I was very leery, so we stayed where we were and these other two cars investigated. Less than a mile down the road they stopped. The bridge had been completely inundated by the mud flow."

The cars then tried another road which took them back past the Hicksons' campsite, opposite Mount St. Helens. Here the volcano was in full rage, producing a symphony of hellish fury, as lightning flashed violently and the ground grumbled in response.

More terrifying, said Mrs. Hickson, was the omnipresent black cloud and the ash and walnut-sized chunks of pumice falling from the cloud.

"That had a bridge too, but over a different river," said Mrs. Hickson. "This was our last possibility or we would have had to search for high ground and await rescue.

"We got to the point where we could see down into the river valley, where we could overlook the destruction. It was incredible. It was a giant log jam. Literally, the river was muddy. Anything in its path was gone, except the bridge.

Mrs. Hickson said they were too busy trying to get out of the valley to realize the extent of the danger they faced. It wasn't until they reached the safety of a ranger station that they thought about what happened.

Libya squad kills again

ROME (UPI) — A Libyan timber merchant found stabbed and strangled apparently is the seventh victim of a terror squad dispatched by Libyan strongman Col. Moammar Khadafy to kill or harass his opponents abroad, police said today.

Police revealed that the body of Fouad Buohjar, 55, was found with a note that read: "Libyan Revolutionary Committees Operating in Rome. Long live the First of September. Allah is Great. Death to traitors."

The message, scrawled on a paper napkin, was attached to a nylon cord tightly wrapped around Buohjar's neck. The "first of September" referred to the day in 1969 when Khadafy overthrew the Libyan monarchy in a bloodless coup.

Police said they were looking for Buohjar's brother-in-law, Abdulkader Ali, who was supposed to deliver to the lumber merchant a small bag of diamonds from the Libyan capital of Tripoli for a fee of $1,200.

They said Ali, who was missing, was a suspect in the case.

Buohar's body was found Tuesday stuffed under a bed in a rooming house in the centre of Rome by his son.

Buohjar was the fourth Libyan to be slain in Rome since March. The mercurial Khadafy has ordered that critics of his regime who did not return to Libya by June 10 "must be inevitably liquidated, wherever they are."

Two other Libyans have been killed in London and one in Bonn, West Germany. Both Britain and the United States recently expelled so-called Libyan diplomats they believed were involved in the terror campaign, in which Khadafy reportedly had dispatched his agents with a "hit list."

Police said Buohjar had arrived in Rome from Milan and was waiting for his son in the rooming house in Rome's centre when he was killed.

'Little Dillinger' held in killing

CLEVELAND (UPI) — Mark Hintz, 13, Cleveland, was shot and killed Tuesday night by a 14-year-old boy carrying a "hit list" and armed with a .357 Magnum revolver, police said today.

The unidentified suspect, arrested several hours after the shooting, earlier told friends he planned to kill a Cleveland police officer, another youngster and himself before an upcoming Juvenile Court hearing, detectives said.

Hintz was killed as his brother, Michael, 17, watched helplessly, according to police, who said the murder weapon was found in a holster about 60 feet from Mark's body.

Police said they are not sure if Mark Hintz was one of those targeted for murder, but added that the suspect had threatened to complete the killings by May 28 — when he's believed due in court in connection with house breakins.

In a two-hour span after Hintz was killed, police said the suspect called his mother four times — each time telling where he was. Police went to the sites each time, but the boy was gone.

Earlier Tuesday, a student at A.B. Hart Junior High School approached Newburgh Heights Patrolman Gary Kolakowski and told him he had overheard a student talking about killing people.

The boy, Kolakowski was told, "felt like he had to take care of some people before he was sent away," police said.

Canada gets second chance

Times News Services

Quebec voters gave Canadian federalism a second chance Tuesday night, but both sides in the bitter referendum made it clear they want some changes made.

With more than 59 per cent of a record turnout of Quebec voters saying no to Levesque's call for a mandate to negotiate sovereignty-association, Ryan said the result shows "we want to continue to decide on our future within Canadian federalism."

"I hope that the government will not go beyond the reasonable limit of the four-year mandate it holds now," Ryan told supporters at a victory celebration in a suburban hockey arena.

"We have to be given the chance to say before long what party is the most qualified to negotiate the renewal of Canadian federalism."

"We believe that it is possible to be proud to be a Quebecer at the same time as being proud to be Canadian," the austere Ryan said in a typically long speech.

"But you must be reminded," he warned, switching to English for TV listeners across Canada, "that fellow Quebecers will ask us to be firm in the defence of their genuine interests and the promotion of certain principles which Quebecers are absolutely convinced are vital for the future of our federal system."

Across town, an obviously crestfallen Levesque told thousands of flag-waving supporters — who cheered their leader deliriously as they fought back tears — that the result means "the ball has been thrown into the federalist court."

"It's up to Trudeau to make good on the promises of the last 35 days," Levesque said, overcome by emotion and fatigue from the gruelling five-week campaign that ended with Tuesday's record 88-percent turnout.

After a standing ovation of several minutes, Levesque told his supporters in a voice hoarse with fatigue that "We'll do it next time."

"Im convinced that one day Quebec will have a rendezvous with history and we will all be present to witness it. But I can't tell you when or how."

He said the No side won despite a "scandalously immoral" campaign. "But with the same serenity we showed in the campaign we have to swallow this defeat. It's harder than any electoral defeat and I've had my share.

By Levesque's side stood his wife Corinne Cote and cabinet minister Lise Payette whose Yvette insults at federalist women voting No was a turning point in the campaign.

The premier said the referendum shows Quebec is badly divided but asked Quebecers to try to put aside their differences. The Yes campaign was a model of national pride and openness to others, he said.

11 dead as mobs battle soldiers, police in Korea

KWANGJU (AP) — Huge mobs of anti-government demonstrators, some armed with machine-guns and rifles, battled soldiers and police in this South Korean city today. Army troops killed at least 11 persons and wounded 63 others as the protesters against martial law took control of almost the entire provincial capital 240 kilometres south of Seoul.

Meanwhile, Park Choong-hoon, a retired major-general who held several government posts and now is head of the Korea Traders Association, was named prime minister to replace Shin Hyon-hwack, who accepted responsibility for last week's bloody student riots and resigned with the rest of the cabinet Tuesday.

The martial-law command announced that the demonstrators had raided several armories containing hundreds of M-16 automatic rifles and M-1 carbines, along with ammunition and a number of light machine-guns. It said two machine-guns set up on top of the Chonnam University's hospital building were used to fire on troops.

The command said the protesters had more than 3,500 weapons and 46,000 rounds of ammunition. It estimated the number of demonstrators at 150,000, while other estimates placed the total at more than 200,000.

Eleven persons were confirmed dead at Kwangju Christian Hospital with at least 63 others, most with gunshot wounds, awaiting treatment. More victims were taken to other hospitals but their number was not known.

Total casualties from the shooting and clashes with soldiers and riot police today were estimated at 300.

The riots have centred in Kwangju for two reasons. It is the home area of dissident leader Kim Dae-jung, arrested Sunday in army sweeps after total martial law was declared. The area has a distinct cultural group that has historically been poorer, with its people treated as second-class citizens. South Korea's rapid industrialization has generally widened the gap between them and the rest of county.

Demonstrators patrolled the streets in commandeered buses and trucks asking for donations of blood. It was the fourth day of increasing protests in Kwangju and the death toll since Sunday rose to 24.

Martial law command Gen. Lee Hee-sung warned in a nationally broadcast statement that soldiers were authorized to act in their own defence and called on the demonstrators to end their protests.

Witnesses said paratroopers were on guard outside Kwangju's provincial government building and opened fire with M-16 automatic rifles when some of the demonstrators tried to drive into them with city buses they commandeered and an armored personnel carrier they stole from a factory. In addition to the armored personnel carrier and buses, they hijacked army jeeps and trucks and manoeuvred them into key positions around the city.

Volcanic lake still swelling

VANCOUVER, Wash. (UPI) — Thick clouds closed over the growing lake behind a 60-metre high mud wall on the north slope of Mount St. Helens today, preventing scientists from telling whether the natural dam was showing signs of crumbling and unleashing millions of gallons of water down the Toutle River valley.

A Washington State Patrol outpost reported a rise of about 25 centimetres in the Toutle River during the night, but reported later that the river had been stable for several hours.

Some scientists have warned that in the "worst possible" case, the mud dam could collapse and send a torrent of floodwater through the Toutle valley and on through the cities of Longview and Kelso, 56 kilometres downstream. The 50,000 residents of the two cities were warned to be prepared for possible evacuation.

University of Washington seismologists reported earthquake activity on the mountain had decreased dramatically since Sunday's mighty eruption that laid down the 60-metre high plug at Spirit Lake and covered eastern Washington with volcanic dust.

"It could be going into dormancy, or it might just be resting after all the activity," spokeswoman Christina Boyko said.

But it was the danger of floodwaters that worried officials the most. They also said mudflows, possibly worse than those touched off by Sunday's fearsome blast, might be an additional problem.

The enormous cloud of grayish volcanic ash that stretched across the country dissipated to a haze over the eastern seaboard today, leaving in its path a gigantic cleanup operation and incalculable damage to farmland, rivers and personal property.

For the first time in two days, the sun trickled through intermittent clouds Tuesday in eastern Washington, hardest hit by the fallout of the slightly acidic and mineral-laden ash that blew into the air from 100 kilometres beneath the surface of erupting Mount St. Helens.

The ash storm was so severe that it stalled cars and closed schools and businesses in several Western states. People had to don special breathing masks.

Washington Gov. Dixy Lee Ray said damage from the volcano and soot was so extensive the amount couldn't be readily determined. She asked President Carter to declare the entire state a disaster area.

Milk price up next week

Victoria consumers can expect the price of milk to increase at least three cents a litre next week as the dairy industry passes along higher wage costs.

Teamster processors and drivers Tuesday ratified a new contract with the dairymen.

Milk prices will also go up on the Lower Mainland.

"I'm sure it would take in excess of three cents a litre to meet that (wage) package," said Jack Aird, marketing director for the Fraser Valley Milk Producers Association.

A three-cent hike would bring the price of a litre of milk to about 79 or 80 cents.

In Victoria a spokesman for Island Farms Dairies said recent increases in packing costs and fuel prices also must be recovered.

Exact timing of the hikes had not yet been decided.

Teamster processors and drivers voted 67.73 per cent to accept across-the-board wage increases of 13 per cent for the first nine months and 11 per cent for the remainder of a two-year pact, with a cost-of-living adjustment clause to increase the second step if inflation exceeds 11 per cent next year.

Employers are the association which services most parts of B.C. with Dairyland products, and Palm and Silverwood dairies operating in the Vancouver area and Island Farms in Victoria.

Cracker-bomb fad has police worried

TORONTO (CP) — A 15-year-old boy maimed himself Monday when the firecracker he was building out of copper pipe and matches exploded.

But police said Joe Carnovale was fortunate because explosive gases escaped from the unclosed end of the pipe, instead of blasting him and his 12-year-old sister, who was watching, with shrapnel.

The blast blew off one of the boy's fingers and doctors were not sure they could save other mangled fingers.

Police are alarmed by this deadly new fad of making home-made firecrackers. On Saturday, an Alliston, Ont., boy was killed when a spark ignited the device he was building.

Post office strike streak snapped

OTTAWA (CP) — A strike-free tentative contract settlement between the government and the Canadian Union of Postal Workers was announced Tuesday night following six hours of intense top-level negotiations.

The agreement in principle on a new contract was revealed by Postmaster-General Andre Ouellet and union leader Jean-Claude Parrot, apparently ending a 15-year-old tradition of confrontation between the two parties that has led to at least wildcat strikes prior to agreement on every contract in the past.

A ratification vote by union members must still be held but officials were optimistic Tuesday.

The two men who personally led the talks behind closed doors would not reveal details of the pact, saying the contract language would be hammered out today.

But each said the settlement is based on the recommendations in a conciliation report which the union had said the government must accept as a minimum to avert a national postal strike.

Neither side put a price tag on the agreement but the key conciliation recommendations are for mainly financial benefits, including acceptance of the government's last wage offer, higher compensation for overtime, night and weekend shifts, restrictions on part-time workers and a special system to clean up unsettled grievances — many of them involving unpaid benefits to postal workers.

Most of these recommendations were rejected by the government's representative on the conciliation board on the grounds they were too expensive for the deficit-ridden post office but Ouellet apparently did not have the same hesitation. He got his mandate to get a quick settlement at a Monday cabinet meeting.

"These fruitful discussions were possible because of the spirit of co-operation on the part of the union," he said.

The history of confrontation that has traditionally marked relations between the two parties dates back to the mid-1960s, before government employees got the legal right to collective bargaining and to strike in 1967.

Every contract before now has been preceded by either a national postal strike, rotating strikes or wildcat walkouts. The last time, in 1978, legally striking postal workers were ordered back to work by Parliament.

Is Reagan fit to be president?

By HENRY FAIRLIE
The Washington Post

At the beginning of this year's election campaigns, the question of Ronald Reagan's age was openly and often mentioned, and as often as not was hotly debated. Today one would think that the issue had been resolved, and that the verdict had been pronounced in his favor. Anyone who raises sharply the fact that old age is closing rapidly on him is made to feel a little gauche.

This seems to happen more and more in the primary campaigns. As the process of nominating a candidate goes on its long and cumbersome way, the question of a candidate's fitness to be president is submerged by the more immediate question of his ability to survive the primary ordeal, the qualities needed for the one being very different from those required for the second. The all-important question of presidential capacity is postponed to the general election, when it is of course too late for either of the parties to change its nominee.

One would have thought that the closer Reagan draws to the nomination, the more piercing and controversial the question of his age becomes, but in fact this is the very opposite of what happens in the present system. It is assumed that his victories prove that he is not too old to be his party's candidate, and whether he is, nonetheless, too old to be president is put aside to be decided at a later date.

In accordance with their traditional impulse not to kick a man when he is up, even the most unexpected Americans are today anxious to show that they can be amiable about Ronald Reagan. I am one of those who cannot join them in this exercise in forbearance. He seems to me today to be as banal a figure as ever to be considered as leader of the free world, and I have no doubt that many of his policies would hurt and neglect those whom his politics ought to protect and succor. His age is by no means my only objection to him.

But how can anyone deny that his age is a legitimate issue in this election? That is one side of the question. And how can the new forbearance of him obscure the fact that his age is a disqualification? That is the second side of the issue.

Let us first be rid of the sillier comparisons with figures from the past. Yes — oh, yes! — Winston Churchill remained in office during the Second World War past the age of 70. But the British people then bundled him out of power at the first opportunity, and even before the war against Japan had been won, so what conclusion (one way or the other) could one draw from that? Yes — oh, yes! — he was then returned to office when he was almost past the age of 77, and did not finally resign (and then only with great reluctance) until he was already an octogenarian. But it is not until now that I have ever heard Churchill's second ministry put forward as a model for our emulation.

The accounts from his ministerial colleagues at the time were hilarious, and would have been alarming if they had not done much of the governing for him. One of the reasons why the memoirs of his doctor, Lord Moran, caused such a scandal was that they presented, in detail and mercilessly, so gross a picture of senility in office.

The final years of Charles de Gaulle in power were no more reassuring. It does not matter to what example one looks — Konrad Adenauer is obviously another — old age in power is always troubling. It is a time of interregnum — even if the old man has just taken power — and of uncertainty about the future. It is always a period of stubbornness at the top — old men are not easily moved — and of restlessness in those meant to serve him, as they prepare to profit from the succession.

There is less loyalty in the administrations of old men than in any other, less disposition to cooperate and make plans with the intention of executing them. Dictators almost always cling to power beyond the time of their usefulness, and the memoirs of their regimes tell vividly of the atmosphere of dissolution and personal hostilities.

It is the same whenever an old man holds the reins. But at least when one speaks of a Churchill or a de Gaulle or an Adenauer, one is talking of men who have held and may still hold the reins, and who merely believe that power should be continued on to them as long as it is their fancy. The people are willing to re-elect him because he is at least a known quantity — "the Chief," "the old boy," "Winnie" — and his colleagues are used to serving him and to circumventing his mischiefs.

Old Men Forget was the title which David Duff Cooper gave to his political memoirs — perhaps one of the 30 greatest political autobiographies in any language — and one thing which old men forget to do is to resign. It is usually easier to allow them to stay on than to get out the hatchets to dispose of them. But what is one to make of an old man who actually wants to hold the highest office for the first time?

We often overlook the fact that very few men or women wish and set out to be president or prime minister. Think back to your class in high school or college, and you will be hard put to remember one who ever entertained such an ambition. Log cabins are simply not populated with children who wish to make it to the White House. Rail-splitters would usually prefer to be chairman of the railroad company than president of the United States.

One in fact has to be rather odd to want to be president at all. One must be that much odder to pursue the presidency for the first time at an age when one could retire with contentment and honor.

Those who want to get to the top of the greasy pole, as Disraeli called it, must be prepared to claw and clamber to keep their place on it. There is nothing honorific in the possession of great power. It is a merciless occupation, often for 24 hours a day, with doubtful rewards. To rule is not the same as to reign, and when to reign also meant to rule, there was not much enjoyment or reward in it either.

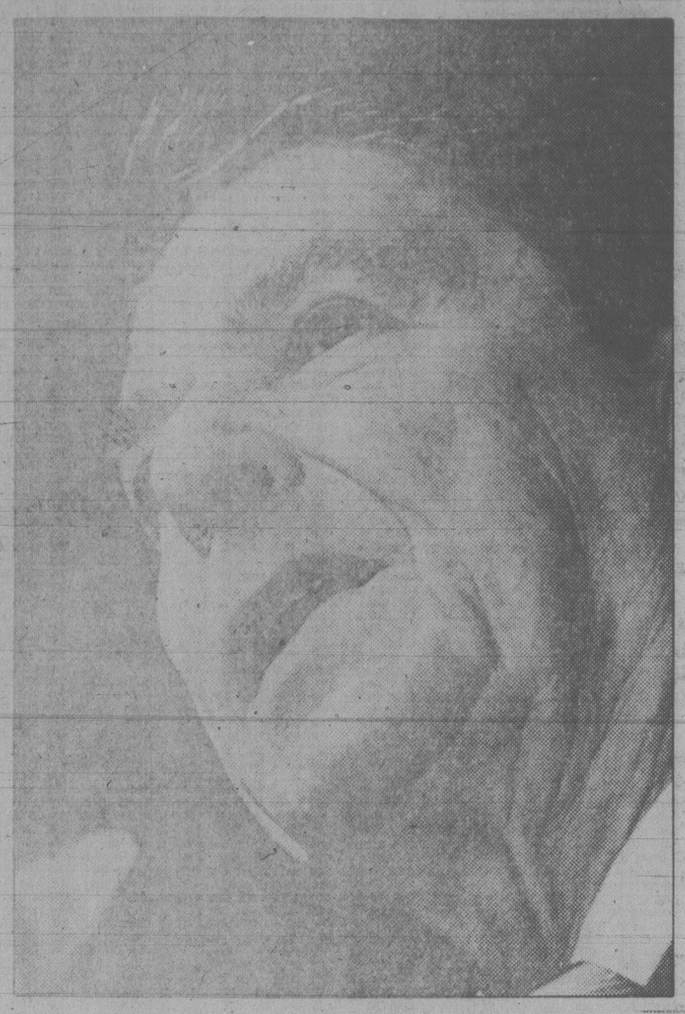

The old man who wants the highest office for the first time is hoping to reign. He wants an Oscar bestowed on him, not for his talents in his profession, for he has won none for those, but simply for being around a long time. He wants it for true grit. He wants to be crowned and enthroned, and then to make progresses through his realm.

This is exactly how Ronald Reagan has sought the presidency — the "eleventh commandment" is the plea of a man who wishes to be crowned by acclamation and not elected in a political rough-and-tumble — and it is the most ominous consequence of his age. It means that yet again an attempt will be made to govern as if the presidency is not a political office. The need for vital political decisions will again be obscured by the effort to reign by amiable royal proclamations. Neither the U.S. nor the free world can afford yet another presidency which tries to escape the hardness of political decisions.

To this confused old man's view of politics will be added the usual stubbornness of old men when they hold the highest office. He will not rule; neither will he reign. He will merely try to reign by substitutes for the royal touch.

The hard business of hammering out and forging new instruments of power, which will survive the president's term of office and fit the political needs of a new generation, which is the most important business to which a politician can attend, will again be postponed, as it has been in America for 40 years. Ronald Reagan in his old age does not promise to rule the nation but to sanctify it, and Americans will discover too late that they elected only a shroud from which the image has faded.

I do not fear that Reagan will take America into an unnecessary war. That is not the way of old men. I fear that America will become what in effect he promises. It will be one great Lourdes, a land in which crutches sprout like forests, because the people have finally been made too supine to need even them.

'Confused, stubborn old man'

Pensions: It needed to be done

THE SUN
An Editorial

The anger of British Columbia's provincial civil servants, municipal employees and teachers at the way the govenent has gone about restricting the indexing of their pensions to the cost of living is fully justified. In failing to consult fully those affected before bringing in legislation to institute changes, the government was rude, arrogant, and plain foolish.

Even if Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe felt it would have been impossible to get the agreement of the public service unions to the kind of alterations he had in mind, he should at least have made the attempt. Now he has not only their disagreement, but their distrust.

But in scoring the government's hamhanded approach it is important not to lose sight of what it is trying to do. It is facing a problem that has been dodged too long: the danger of the pension system's being undermined by one of its most attractive features.

As desirable as it may be to protect pensions from the robbery of inflation, there is not much point in open-ended indexing if its end result is to bankrupt the kitty. That is what has to happen if not enough money is going in to pay for indexing, and the people who are going to be hurt are those whom it is intended to benefit.

Whether the government has chosen the right way to put the pension schemes on a sounder financial basis is something that needs to be debated. It can legitimately be argued that the plans would be in better shape today if they had been administered with more care in the past and if the workers involved had had more say in their management. But the government deserves credit for acting with the objective of saving them, not destroying them.

In proposing controls on the amounts to be paid out the government is not depriving the public sector employees of anything that is available to those in the private sector. Indexing of pensions has made the public sector employees a favored group by comparison. It is unfair to expect their employer, the taxpayer, to bail out a leaking ship he cannot climb aboard. It is fair, as the administrator of a forest industry pension scheme said the other day, "that the people who are going to be getting the pension benefits should pay for them."

It may be that the public servants are prepared to put more into their pensions to maintain a higher degree of protection against inflation. Mr. Wolfe should be prepared to listen to any and all suggestions for improvements, and incorporate the best in his legislation.

The ultimate answer, of course, is to lower inflation to a level where protection from it becomes unnecessary. That may be beyond the control of this government, but it has certainly not helped matters by overtaxing the province to finance record spending this year.

A government that would do that obviously needs help in managing pensions. Though their anger is justified, spokesmen for the public sector employees and the labor movement generally would do better to offer constructive suggestions than issue threats.

Bottom of the world, Ma!

Russell Baker

NEW YORK — I never watch shows that give a misleading impression of the people they deal with, so naturally I passed up Death of a Princess the other night after Saudi Arabia announced that it gave a wrong impression of life in the oil-rich kingdom.

For the same reason, I didn't go to see Cruising, which, judging from the public demonstrations against it, gave a bad impression of the homosexual life. I am not going to see the new Charlie Chan movie either because, though it hasn't been made yet, Americans of Chinese origin say Charlie Chan is an affront to Chinese culture.

Unfortunately, I did see some Charlie Chan movies 40 years ago, but I was too young to know better. For the same reason, I went to see Hamlet in 1947. However, I have never seen it since, and never intend to, now that Danes have told me it gives a very bad impression of life in Denmark.

I walked out of The Godfather. after the first 30 minutes when I realized it was giving a misleading impression of Italian family life, and dropped War and Peace like a 10-pound sack of potatoes after it became obvious that Tolstoy was giving a completely lopsided impression of Napoleonic France.

Does this reflect an undue sensitivity to the feelings of others? It might have seemed so once, but that was before I felt for myself the sting these misleading entertainments can produce. Which brings us to Ralph Bellamy.

I refer, of course, to the movie Ralph Bellamy and not to the stage Ralph Bellamy who, as Franklin D. Roosevelt in Sunrise at Campobello, swept everything before him with his mighty deceney. The movie Ralph Bellamy, as graybeards and late-night TV addicts will remember, never swept anything before him.

In movie after movie Ralph Bellamy was the man who didn't get the girl in the end. And why? Because Ralph Bellamy was polite and kind and gentle.

It is still embarrassing to confess — such is the grotesque power of movies to make you ashamed of your own culture — but I identified with Ralph Bellamy. I was polite, kind and gentle, too. Not that I wanted to be, mind you. I wanted to be sassy like Clark Gable or sullen like Humphrey Bogart, but my attempts invariably resulted in a punch in the nose; I was forced to take the polite, kind and gentle route as a matter of survival.

Well, the humiliations were constant. As soon as Bellamy walked on the screen and told Irene Dunne, "I have the honeymoon suite on the Berengaria, dear," the entire audience broke into snickers. Everybody was thinking: "That poor polite, kind and gentle sap — too dumb to realize that Irene is going to be in Cary Grant's arms when the Berengaria sails tonight."

I forced a snicker, too, to show I was a regular guy, but it hurt, friends. It hurt. What that movie was saying to me was: "You are the effete product of an inferior culture."

In some movies Ralph planned to take his mother along on the Berengaria because Ralph, you see, liked his mother. He respected her. He called her "Mother," not "Mom." He didn't refer to his mother as "the old lady." She was "Mother." And everybody laughed. People who had mothers were ridiculous and couldn't get the girl; that's what the movie was saying.

Well, you guess right; I had a mother. What's more, I didn't call her "the old lady." I liked my mother. I respected her. I was, in short, a loser. No girl for me at the end. Nothing but the awful loneliness of that honeymoon suite on the Berengaria as Irene and Cary embraced on the dock and my mother asked, "Why in the world did you order all that champagne?" while the audience hooted with delight.

Cary Grant didn't have a mother. Clark Gable didn't have a mother. Humphrey Bogart didn't have a mother. James Cagney, to be sure, had a mother once, but she was a murderous old gunslinger and he called her "Ma," not "Mother," and honored her by getting blown up on top of a gas-storage tank while screaming, "Top of the world, Ma!"

Ralph Bellamy movies were as commonplace as Charlie Chan movies, and is the terrible fashion of these things the unfair and distorted stereotype began to affect my behavior. I became politer, kinder and gentler with the passing years, and lost more and more girls in the end.

Politeness, kindness and gentleness became my way of life and the good times passed me by. Politeness, kindness and gentleness are why I never see a show or read a book that anybody doesn't want me to see or read and why I have to make my own good times playing solitaire and looking for funny names in the telephone directory.

These days diamonds are investor's best friend

By DEREK SIDENIUS

A dwindling faith in paper money and fear the federal government will impose tough currency controls are driving more and more Canadians to put some of their savings in investment diamonds.

According to John Jacox, manager of the Victoria branch of Diamonds International Ltd. demand the gems has mushroomed in recent years.

The company's sales over the past four years reveals just how attractive they have become.

In 1976, the first year the company founded in Calgary by oil magnate Jim Brown went into business, it had sales of $80,000.

The other is Western Diamond House Ltd. operated by long-time Victoria resident John Freedthy.

Neither Freedthy nor Jacox would talk about the volume of sales they are putting through in Victoria but both conceded they expect a 40- to 50-per cent increase in orders this year over last.

Jacox says nothing quite matches the potential and security of investment diamonds.

The gems have steadily gone up in value over the past 42 years. Between 1967 and 1978 the growth rate was 353 per cent.

Investment diamonds differ from jewelry diamonds in that they are far rarer, making up only a tiny fraction of all diamonds produced.

They include the top seven of the 23 grades of color and top six of the 11 grades of clarity, the two major factors that determine a diamond's value.

Currently a D-flawless, the most perfect naturally occurring diamond, brings $86,600 U.S. a carat. Even the lowest quality investment stone, J-slightly included #1, costs $5,300 U.S. a carat.

Jacox says it has reached the point major investment houses are now considering orders for half-carat diamonds.

If the demand continues — and there is every indication it will — quarter-carat orders will be next.

By leaving the diamonds in U.S. banks, the buyers don't have to pay Canadian excise and sales taxes which add 19 per cent to the price. And if the buyers should decide to resell them they have a far larger potential market to draw from.

There is also a fear the government will introduce currency controls limiting the amount of money Canadians can take out of the country.

He suggests no more than 20 to 25 per cent of savings should be put into the gems.

In addition, purchasers should make sure their diamonds have been certified by the Gemnology Institute of America. That adds five to six per cent to the cost but it is well worth it, he says. Not only does it guarantee the value of the diamond but the certificate is recognized anywhere in the world. It's like a pedigree.

There are other precautions, too.

Diamonds are regarded in B.C. as just another commodity and commodity dealers do not have to be registered with the superintendent of brokers.

That may change. The securities commission is currently drafting legislation that could be introduced before the year is out.

Until then, the lack of legislative control means there is always a risk to investors of getting stung, a spokesman for the RCMP commercial crime section in Victoria says.

Seattle traffic down

The Victoria Princess ferry and the Flying Princess jetfoil carried a total of 1,782 passengers from Seattle to Victoria over the three-day holiday weekend, according to NDP sources.

NDP critics say it represents a loss to the local tourist economy of about $100,000 just for the one weekend,.

The managing director of the Crown-owned B.C. Steamship Co., Bob Wright, was unable to confirm the NDP's traffic figures and would not comment on them.

Officials statistics probably will not be ready until next week, he said.

"I'm more interested in what we do in the future than what we did last weekend," Wright added.

"I'm sure the minister of tourism will use evry possible excuse — that the Americans staged an eruption, that the weather was bad — but we're convinced it's the change of vessel," said Bob Skelly (NDP-Alberni).

"The Marguerite had a nostalgic attraction for tourists."

CRD ruled liable if Saanich wins Tillicum battle

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

Saanich may be able to claim $46,200 damages from the Capital Region District for every month construction of the Tillicum shopping centre is delayed, Mayor Mel Couvelier said Tuesday.

Couvelier was commenting on the latest round in the three-week-old court battle over the $30 million development.

He told aldermen B.C. Supreme Court Justice Mr. A.A. Mackoff ruled in Vancouver earlier Tuesday that Saanich can claim damages if it wins the case.

Damages were calculated by municipal staff based on loss of interest, business tax and property taxes, Couvelier explained.

If damages were claimed, they would be calculated from May 9 — the date Saanich could have issued building permits to Cal Investments.

Granting Saanich the right to damages, if it is successful, was one of several decisions MacKoff made Tuesday.

Mackoff also granted Saanich an injunction preventing the CRD from passing a bylaw limiting the size of regional shopping centres to 295,000 square feet.

And Cal Investments has launched an independent action seeking a declaration that the CRD bylaw is illegal on the grounds of discrimination.

Cal Investments claims the bylaw is discriminatory.

Saanich municipal solicitor Chris Nation said today there is a strong possibility Cal Investments will join its action to the court case now proceeding in Vancouver.

The judge denied an application by Cal for damages from the regional district.

Meanwhile, CRD directors planned an emergency meeting today to discuss the latest court developments in the three-week-old case but later cancelled it.

The original injunction preventing Saanich from lifting a restrictive covenant limiting the size of the centre to 295,000 square feet will stand, the judge ruled.

But Mackoff said Saanich can issue building permits to the company for the 295,000-square-foot development.

However, Cal lawyer Brian Wallace has said in court his company will not proceed with the smaller development.

Cal wants to expand the centre to 495,000 square feet to include an Eatons store.

The regional district was granted an injunction preventing the expansion.

Board chairman James Campbell said Saanich's move to lift the covenant is a breach of faith.

Mishap kills woman

A 20-year-old Saanichton woman was killed Tuesday night in a single-vehicle accident on Highway 97, about 40 kilometres north of Williams Lake.

Volcano roadblocks strand Victoria pair

A group of Victoria rockhounds who spent two nights at a ranger station about 100 miles northeast of smoking Mount St. Helens returned home last night, leaving two members behind — stranded but safe.

Victoria Lapidary Society president Claude Rawlings and his wife are on Saddle Mountain in Washington state waiting for roads to clear so they can come home, Catherine Dyer told the Times today.

She said 16 members of the lapidary group were stuck in the tiny hamlet of Vantage, Wash., waiting for a heavy cloud of volcanic ash to clear.

Vantage was directly in the path of a black cloud of ash blowing eastward, according to Mrs. Dyer, who said darkness and several inches of ash on the road made it impossible to drive.

The group left Ellensburg, Wash., about 9:30 a.m. Sunday, travelling east to meet the Rawlings on Saddle Mountain for a rock hunting expedition.

It had no idea Mount St. Helens had exploded, spewing tons of hot mud, gases and volcanic ash.

"It started getting darker and darker and there was thunder and lightning," Mrs. Dyer said.

They were told what happed when they reached Vantage.

"By the time we got to Vantage we could begin to feel ash falling. It was pitch black, darker than night. We couldn't see anything.

"Vantage was a disaster area. People were sleeping in cars," said Mrs. Dyer.

Only one phone call was allowed, making it impossible for people to personally contact their worried families.

Dawn Rawlings, 17, said her parents called her Monday night and said they have no idea when they will be allowed to leave the area.

Three inches of volcanic ash covers the Saddle Mountain area and state police are moving people out in small convoys, Dawn said.

Meanwhile, a bus load of 43 Ellensburg high school students stranded in Victoria since Sunday left Victoria today for the trip home.

The Ellensburg musical group was performing at University of Victoria over the weekend when the mountain exploded and all roads in the area closed.

"We want to be sure when we start out with this busload of kids we get home safely," Ellensburge teacher Betty Burnett said Tuesday.

UVic extended the school's credit to allow them to sleep and eat on campus until the end of the crisis.

Law students again tackle police duties

Four University of Victoria law students will spend the summer working as cadets with the Victoria police department in the 10th year of a program initiated by retired chief John Gregory.

They are first-year students Linda Tarras, Paul Grier and Gregory Harney, and second-year student Andrew Petter. They will perform all duties of a police recruit.

The program began in 1970 and was the first of its kind in Canada. More than 35 police departments have followed suit.

No honor as thieves end up in same boat

There's no honor among thieves.

To prove the point city police have five persons in custody, one for theft of a fishing boat and four others for breaking into the same boat and stealing equipment and supplies.

Police are taking special pleasure in the catch because it all started with a report of a minor break-in at Capital City Marine Fuels, 124 Kingston, Tuesday morning.

Nothing much was taken — some change, cigarettes and gum — and at first police suspected juveniles.

But then the owner, Ronald Davis, said he had been having difficulty with a customer, a Campbell River man who was living on a boat somewhere in the area.

Officers checked the wharfs but couldn't find the man or boat. So they contacted Campbell River RCMP to see if they could help.

They indicated they were looking for the same person in connection with the theft of a 20-foot fishing boat on April 28.

Shortly after 9 p.m. two patrol officers spotted a boat moored to a dock under the Johnson Street bridge.

They went aboard and found the suspect.

The boat had recently been painted over but the registration number confirmed it was the same vessel stolen from Campbell River.

They took the man into custody and locked up the vessel.

That would normally have been the end of the matter but at 4:35 a.m. today two officers stopped two men in a car on a downtown street for a routine check and found a sleeping bag and marine gear stuffed in the back seat.

That aroused the officers' suspicions and so they brought the pair to the station for questioning.

As they were entering, the two officers who had arrested the man on the boat recognized the marine gear as coming from the stolen boat.

They subsequently discovered the boat had been broken into.

Further investigation led to the arrest of another man and a woman.

All five were to appear in provincial court today.

Pressure for more sidewalks

North Saanich council is being pressured to build more sidewalks in the largely rural municipality.

A delegation of 50 residents, lead by former mayor Paul Grieve, Tuesday night urged construction of sidewalks on portions of Birch, Downy and West Saanich roads.

The group expressed concern about the safety of pedestrians, particularly children, and cited the deaths of Carolyn Stansal and her infant son, Benjamin, who were crushed by a truck while walking near their home on Birch Road last Oct. 15.

Council agreed to look into the request but deferred a decision until the next meeting of council in two weeks.

Only a handful of roads in the municipality have pedestrian paths.

'Absolutely deplorable,' Pollen brands centre plan

By NORMAN GIDNEY

"It's absolutely deplorable. Why more people aren't enraged, I don't know," he told about 60 people at the James Bay Community School.

He illustrated his speech with a slide show that jumped from the Inner Harbor to Dallas Road to the west end of Vancouver, New York and Scandinavia, demonstrating his arguments for leaving the harbor edge as open green space.

Referring to recent remarks by Premier Bill Bennett and city Ald. Bob Wright that there are only two types of people — builders and knockers — Pollen flashed a slide of smoggy, crowded Manhattan on the screen.

He showed a slide of the proposed three-tower hotel which developer Sandy Reid wanted to erect on the waterfront site of the convention centre back in the early 1970s.

Mayor Bill Tindall is trying to deliver the old Reid development, minus the towers, Pollen charged.

"The knockers built Laurel Point park. The knockers built the lower causeway," he said.

Then he showed slides of Turku and Tapiola in Finland as well as Stockholm where developments — sometimes high-rise apartments — have been located in the midst of green space.

In Turku, no one may build within 100 yards of the water, Pollen said.

He also tore into developer Sam Bawlf's $5 million luxury condominium development on the waterfront, immediately north of the convention centre site at Wharf and Fort.

"Bawlf is now building a monster that makes the convention centre look like a work of art," Pollen said.

The small gathering, held just before a public hearing by city council tonight on the convention centre, attracted a mixed gathering of neighborhood activists and politicians as well as a minority of convention centre boosters.

Donna Thomas, 1214-345 Quebec, said jobs for young Victorians aren't going to happen without some kind of development like the centre.

She said she has travelled to other cities where the convention centres are right on the water and they are used as much by local residents as visiting businessmen.

Aldermen Bill McElroy and John Cooper came to the meeting. Defeated mayoral candidate Murray Glazier came out against the convention centre, as did former Esquimalt MLA Jim Gorst.

The aldermen were silent except when McElroy questioned Pollen's challenge to city council to hold a referendum on the whole controversy.

McElroy said a referendum can only be held at the next municipal election in 1981; Pollen replied that with the provincial cabinet's permission the restriction could be waived.

Tour bus operator Gorst said he's been working since 1965 to preserve the harbor and Gorge waterway.

Rallies planned to protest pension changes

B.C. public sector unions will hold a series of rallies to focus attention on their dissatisfaction with proposed changes to pension legislation.

The decision to stage the demonstrations arose from a meeting Tuesday of the public sector committee of the B.C. Federation of Labor.

Details of the rallies will be hammered out at another meeting Thursday.

"The purpose will be to try and convince the government that there are enough people, public service people, vitally concerned about the pensions," Robbie Robinson, spokesman for the B.C. Government Employees Union, said today.

He said the rally also is intended to pressure the government to either withdraw the legislation or at least revamp some of the bill.

Union secretary John Fryer said last Friday after a meeting with Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe that the union was not ruling out job action in order to put its point across.

However, no mention of job action emerged from Tuesday's meeting.

The effect of the pension legislation would be to increase mandatory employee contributions to public service and teachers' pension plans while putting a ceiling on the amount of indexing permitted.

Speaking of the B.C. government employees' plan, Robinson said it is in good shape with the lowest unfunded liability of any such public sector plan in the country.

With proper investment any threat to the plan could be avoided, he said, adding that the BCGEU wants a separate committment from the government because it doesn't feel its plan is in financial danger.

Meanwhile, about 3,200 B.C. Hydro employees who drive and maintain bus service in Victoria and Vancouver will also be affected by the pension legislation.

As a result of the transfer of transit service from Hydro to the Urban Transit Authority, the employees will be forced to give up their own pension plan and pick up the Municipal Pension Plan.

Those affected are members of the Amalgamated Transit Union and the Office and Technical Employees Union.

Preston Storey, secretary of the ATU's Victoria local, said today the union was concerned at first but has now been told the new plan will be at least as good as the existing one with Hydro.

However, the employees' current plan includes a cost-of-living indexing system and there is some concern about what effect the government's new proposal will have on that benefit, Storey said.

Any details about the transfer and how it will affect the employees will likely be provided at a meeting Friday with government and transit authority officials, he added.

Carr house gets lift

Stay calm, residents of James Bay. They're not going to take Emily Carr's old house away — it just looks like it.

A firm of house movers moved onto the property of the 120-year-old heritage building at 207 Government this morning.

Employees of Nickel Bros. House Movers of Nanaimo were tossing off railroad tie-sized timbers used in jacking up buildings.

Two signs on the boarded over windows advertise the services of the house moving firm, and the heavy equipment in the front yard suggests the Carr home built by Emily's father in 1863 will disappear from the corner of Government and Simcoe.

But it isn't true.

The house is going to be moved, but only straight up a few feet so experts can check the condition of supporting timbers. The house has no modern foundation and rests on a series of brick piers.

Russell Irvine, director of the provincial Heritage Conservation Branch, said today it's the first phase of a restoration program for the "House of Small" where B.C.'s best known artist was born in 1871.

"It's very wet and we may find a lot of rot," he said, adding that insects may also be a problem.

The house has been closed for several weeks and the children's art classes ended earlier this spring.

By AB KENT

A 1980-81 tuition fee increase amounting to $3 per full-time course breezed through a University of Victoria board of governors' meeting Tuesday with only two opposing votes — both from student members.

President Howard Petch said the 7.69 per cent hike — which increases fees for full-time undergraduates by $45 to a maximum of $630 — represents the smallest increase which could be considered in view of operating costs.

It is not enough, Petch said, to keep abreast of the cost of running UVic.

The president said he is conscious of the difficulties faced by many students — especially those from out of town — in meeting the cost of attending university.

And Petch also said he is aware that promised improvements in the federal-provincial student aid program have not occurred.

But to alleviate this to some degree, he said he will recommend next month that a 50 per cent boost be given in bursary and other financial aid for undergraduate and graduate students.

Governors also raised other revenue provisions — fees for law students are up by $45 to $713; first- and second-year MA and PhD courses by $47 to $658; parttime students by $6 per unit to $84 to a maximum $658; auditor's, course challenge, supplemental exam, document evaluation and transcript fees are up by varying amounts.

Part-time students in past have paid nearly double the cost of full-time attendance. Now, part-time tuition will be no higher than the cost of a regular degree.

Petch introduced a more lenient system of service charges and late payment fees for most students.

This year students were assessed $38,500 by means of a 10 per cent charge on unpaid fees.

If accounts are met at the same rate in the coming session, the fines would drop to $21,500.

Petch said this will be easier on students who are marginally late, but students who are persistently delinquent will pay more.

Petch said the new fees are a compromise between what the university really needs and what students can afford.

Student representative Brian Klaver said he expects the higher fees will result in dropouts.

Fees can't be viewed in isolation from other costs students face, he said.

Text books, for example, have risen dramatically, and living costs are high.

Students need more job opportunities enabling them to save money for education, and the student loan system needs to be opened up, he said.

Compared with other western universities, the UVic fee hike is typical: Simon Fraser went up $45 (8.3 per cent) but the total is still only $585; UBC rose 10 per cent ($54) to $590; Alberta universities rose 10 per cent ($55) to $605; Saskatchewan by 5.3 per cent ($35) to $690; Manitoba by 8 per cent ($45) to $615.

Woodwards' food workers may strike

Employees in the food department at Woodwards' Mayfair mall store are now in a legal strike position following the breakdown of talks last week.

The 150 members of the Retail Clerks' Union, Local 1518, served 72-hour strike notice about two weeks ago.

Mediator Ken Albertini' efforts to resolve the dispute came to an end last Thursday. He has withdrawn.

New 'down-under' phone link planned

A new submarine telephone cable linking Canada with Hawaii, Australia and New Zealand will be connected at Port Alberni, Teleglobe Canada has announced.

The $300 million project will begin immediately.

The cable will carry more than 1,000 telephone circuits and will replace the existing cable which carries only 80 circuits.

The new cable reflects the increasing demand for Pacific Rim communications, a Teleglobe spokesman said in Montreal today.

Costs will be shared by all the countries using the cable.

Port Alberni already has a Teleglobe office and small staff supervising the present cable.

No staff increase is anticipated but the new line will bring long-term job security for Teleglobe personnel at Port Alberni.

Rallies planned to protest pension changes

B.C. public sector unions will hold a series of rallies to focus attention on their dissatisfaction with proposed changes to pension legislation.

The decision to stage the demonstrations arose from a meeting Tuesday of the public sector committee of the B.C. Federation of Labor.

Details of the rallies will be hammered out at another meeting Thursday.

"The purpose will be to try and convince the government that there are enough people, public service people, vitally concerned about the pensions," Robbie Robinson, spokesman for the B.C. Government Employees Union, said today.

He said the rally also is intended to pressure the government to either withdraw the legislation or at least revamp some of the bill.

Union secretary John Fryer said last Friday after a meeting with Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe that the union was not ruling out job action in order to put its point across.

However, no mention of job action emerged from Tuesday's meeting.

The effect of the pension legislation would be to increase mandatory employee contributions to public service and teachers' pension plans while putting a ceiling on the amount of indexing permitted.

Speaking of the B.C. government employees' plan, Robinson said it is in good shape with the lowest unfunded liability of any such public sector plan in the country.

With proper investment any threat to the plan could be avoided, he said, adding that the BCGEU wants a separate committment from the government because it doesn't feel its plan is in financial danger.

Meanwhile, about 3,200 B.C. Hydro employees who drive and maintain bus service in Victoria and Vancouver will also be affected by the pension legislation.

As a result of the transfer of transit service from Hydro to the Urban Transit Authority, the employees will be forced to give up their own pension plan and pick up the Municipal Pension Plan.

Those affected are members of the Amalgamated Transit Union and the Office and Technical Employees Union.

Preston Storey, secretary of the ATU's Victoria local, said today the union was concerned at first but has now been told the new plan will be at least as good as the existing one with Hydro.

However, the employees' current plan includes a cost-of-living indexing system and there is some concern about what effect the government's new proposal will have on that benefit, Storey said.

Any details about the transfer and how it will affect the employees will likely be provided at a meeting Friday with government and transit authority officials, he added.

Carr house gets lift

Stay calm, residents of James Bay. They're not going to take Emily Carr's old house away — it just looks like it.

A firm of house movers moved onto the property of the 120-year-old heritage building at 207 Government this morning.

Employees of Nickel Bros. House Movers of Nanaimo were tossing off railroad tie-sized timbers used in jacking up buildings.

Two signs on the boarded over windows advertise the services of the house moving firm, and the heavy equipment in the front yard suggests the Carr home built by Emily's father in 1863 will disappear from the corner of Government and Simcoe.

But it isn't true.

The house is going to be moved, but only straight up a few feet so experts can check the condition of supporting timbers. The house has no modern foundation and rests on a series of brick piers.

Russell Irvine, director of the provincial Heritage Conservation Branch, said today it's the first phase of a restoration program for the "House of Small" where B.C.'s best known artist was born in 1871.

"It's very wet and we may find a lot of rot," he said, adding that insects may also be a problem.

The house has been closed for several weeks and the children's art classes ended earlier this spring.

UVic board increase tuition fee smallest possible with inflation

By AB KENT

A 1980-81 tuition fee increase amounting to $3 per full-time course breezed through a University of Victoria board of governors' meeting Tuesday with only two opposing votes — both from student members.

President Howard Petch said the 7.69 per cent hike — which increases fees for full-time undergraduates by $45 to a maximum of $630 — represents the smallest increase which could be considered in view of operating costs.

It is not enough, Petch said, to keep abreast of the cost of running UVic.

The president said he is conscious of the difficulties faced by many students — especially those from out of town — in meeting the cost of attending university.

And Petch also said he is aware that promised improvements in the federal-provincial student aid program have not occurred.

But to alleviate this to some degree, he said he will recommend next month that a 50 per cent boost be given in bursary and other financial aid for undergraduate and graduate students.

Governors also raised other revenue provisions — fees for law students are up by $45 to $713; first- and second-year MA and PhD courses by $47 to $658; parttime students by $6 per unit to $84 to a maximum $658; auditor's, course challenge, supplemental exam, document evaluation and transcript fees are up by varying amounts.

Part-time students in past have paid nearly double the cost of full-time attendance. Now, part-time tuition will be no higher than the cost of a regular degree.

Petch introduced a more lenient system of service charges and late payment fees for most students.

This year students were assessed $38,500 by means of a 10 per cent charge on unpaid fees.

If accounts are met at the same rate in the coming session, the fines would drop to $21,500.

Petch said this will be easier on students who are marginally late, but students who are persistently delinquent will pay more.

Petch said the new fees are a compromise between what the university really needs and what students can afford.

Student representative Brian Klaver said he expects the higher fees will result in dropouts.

Fees can't be viewed in isolation from other costs students face, he said.

Text books, for example, have risen dramatically, and living costs are high.

Students need more job opportunities enabling them to save money for education, and the student loan system needs to be opened up, he said.

Compared with other western universities, the UVic fee hike is typical: Simon Fraser went up $45 (8.3 per cent) but the total is still only $585; UBC rose 10 per cent ($54) to $590; Alberta universities rose 10 per cent ($55) to $605; Saskatchewan by 5.3 per cent ($35) to $690; Manitoba by 8 per cent ($45) to $615.

Woodwards' food workers may strike

Employees in the food department at Woodwards' Mayfair mall store are now in a legal strike position following the breakdown of talks last week.

The 150 members of the Retail Clerks' Union, Local 1518, served 72-hour strike notice about two weeks ago.

Mediator Ken Albertini' efforts to resolve the dispute came to an end last Thursday. He has withdrawn.

New 'down-under' phone link planned

A new submarine telephone cable linking Canada with Hawaii, Australia and New Zealand will be connected at Port Alberni, Teleglobe Canada has announced.

The $300 million project will begin immediately.

The cable will carry more than 1,000 telephone circuits and will replace the existing cable which carries only 80 circuits.

The new cable reflects the increasing demand for Pacific Rim communications, a Teleglobe spokesman said in Montreal today.

Costs will be shared by all the countries using the cable.

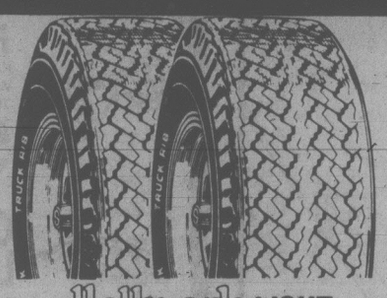

Port Alberni already has a Teleglobe office and small staff supervising the present cable.

No staff increase is anticipated but the new line will bring long-term job security for Teleglobe personnel at Port Alberni.
